That the captain ſuppos'd he was curate. Swift.

Ni´nnyhammer. n. ſ. [from ninny.] A ſimpleton.

Have you no more manners than to rail at Hocus, that has ſaved that plod-pated, numſkull'd, ninny-hammer of yours from ruin, and all his family. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

Ninth. adj. [neʒoða, Saxon.] That which precedes the tenth; the firſt after the eighth; the ordinal of nine.

Upon a ſtrict obſervation of many, I have not found any that ſee the ninth day. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To NIP. v. a. [nijpen, Dutch.]

1. To pinch off with the nails; to bite with the teeth.

In oranges and lemons, the nipping of their rind giveth out their ſmell more. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

2. To cut off by any ſlight means.

The ſmall ſhoots that extract the ſap of the moſt leading branches, muſt be nipt off. Mortimer.

3. To blaſt; to deſtroy before full growth.

This is the ſtate of man; to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow bloſſoms,
And bears his bluſhing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a froſt, a killing froſt;
And when he thinks, good eaſy man, full ſurely
His greatneſs is a ripening, nips his root;
And then he falls as I do. Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

A flower doth ſpread and dye,
Thou would'ſt extend me to ſome good,
Before I were by froſt's extremity nipt in the bud. Herb.

His delivery now proves
Abortive, as the firſt-born bloom of ſpring,
Nipt with the lagging rear of winter's froſt. Milton.

Had he not been nipped in the bud, he might have made a formidable figure in his own works among poſterity. Addiſon.

From ſuch encouragement it is eaſy to gueſs to what perfection I might have brought this work, had it not been nipt in the bud. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

4. To pinch as froſt.

The air bites ſhrewdly, it is very cold.—
—It is a nipping and an eager air. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

When iſicles hang by the wall,
And Dick the ſhepherd blows his nail;
When blood is nipt, and ways be foul,
Then nightly ſings the ſtaring owl. Shakeſp. Love's L. Loſt.

5. To vex; to bite.

And ſharp remorſe his heart did prick and nip,
That drops of blood thence like a well did play. Spenſer.

6. To ſatiriſe; to ridicule; to taunt ſarcaſtically.

But the right gentle mind would bite his lip
To hear the javel ſo good men to nip. Hubberd's Tale.

Quick wits commonly be in deſire new fangled; in purpoſe unconſtant; bold with any perſon; buſy in every matter; ſoothing ſuch as be preſent, nipping any that is abſent. Aſcham's Schoolmaſter.

Nip. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. A pinch with the nails or teeth.

I am ſharply taunted, yea, ſometimes with pinches, nips, and bobs. Aſcham's Schoolmaſter.

2. A ſmall cut.

What this a ſleeve? 'tis like a demicannon;
What up and down carv'd like an apple-tart?
Here's ſnip, and nip, and cut, and ſliſh and ſlaſh,
Like to a cenſer in a barber's ſhop. Shakeſpeare.

3. A blaſt.

So haſty fruits and too ambitious flow'rs,
Scorning the midwifry of rip'ning ſhow'rs,
In ſpite of froſts, ſpring from th' unwilling earth,
But find a nip untimely as their birth. Stepney.

4. A taunt; a ſarcaſm.

Ni´pplewort. n. ſ. [Lampſana.] A weed.

Nisi Prius. n. ſ. [In law.] A judicial writ, which lieth in caſe where the inqueſt is panelled and returned before the juſtices of the bank; the one party or the other making petition to have this writ for the eaſe of the country. It is directed to the ſheriff, commanding that he cauſe the men impanelled to come before the juſtices in the ſame county, for the determining of the cauſe there, except it be ſo difficult that it need great deliberation: in which caſe, it is ſent again to the bank. It is ſo called from the firſt words of the writ niſi apud talem locum prius venerint; whereby it appeareth, that juſtices of aſſizes and juſtices of niſi prius differ. So that juſtices of niſi prius muſt be one of them before whom the cauſe is depending in the bench, with ſome other good men of the county aſſociated to him. Cowel.

Nit. n. ſ. [hnitu, Saxon.] The egg of a louſe, or ſmall animal.

The whame, or burrel-fly, is vexatious to horſes in ſummer, not by ſtinging them, but only by their bombylious noiſe, or tickling them in ſticking their nits, or eggs, on the hair. Derham.

Ni´tency. n. ſ. [nitentia, Latin.]

1. Luſtre; clear brightneſs.

2. [From the Latin, nitor.] Endeavour; ſpring to expand itſelf.

The atoms of fire accelerate the motion of theſe particles; from which acceleration their ſpring, or endeavour outward, will be augmented: that is, thoſe zones will have a ſtrong nitency to fly wider open. Boyle.

Ni´thing. n. ſ. [or niding; ſee Niding.] A coward, daſtard, poltroon.

Ni´tid. adj. [nitidus, Lat.] Bright; ſhining; luſtrous.

We reſtore old pieces of dirty gold to a clean and nitid yellow, by putting them into fire and aqua-fortis, which take off the adventitious filth. Boyle on Colours.

NI´TRE. n. ſ. [nitre, French; nitrum, Latin.]

The ſalt which we know at this time, under the name of nitre or ſalt-petre, is a cryſtalline pellucid, but ſomewhat whitiſh ſubſtance, of an acrid and bitteriſh taſte, impreſſing a peculiar ſenſe of coldneſs upon the tongue. This ſalt, though it affords, by means of fire, an acid ſpirit capable of diſſolving almoſt every thing, yet manifeſts no ſign of its containing any acid at all in its crude ſtate. Nitre is of the number of thoſe ſalts which are naturally blended in imperceptible particles in earths, ſtones, and other foſſil ſubſtances, as the particles of metals are in their ores: it is ſometimes however found pure, in form of an eſſloreſcence, either on its ores or on the ſurface of old walls; theſe eſſloreſcences diſſolved in proper water, ſhooting into regular and proper cryſtals of nitre. The earth from which nitre is made, both in Perſia and the Eaſt-Indies, is a kind of yellowiſh marl found in the bare cliffs of the ſides of hills expoſed to the northern and eaſtern winds, and never in any other ſituation. The natrum or nitre of the ancients, is a genuine, native, and pure ſalt, extremely different from our nitre, and from all other native ſalts; being a fixed alkali plainly of the nature of thoſe made by fire from vegetables, yet being capable of a regular cryſtallization, which thoſe ſalts are not. It is found on or very near the ſurface of the earth, in thin flat cakes, ſpungy, light, and friable; and when pure, of a pale browniſh white colour. In ſcripture we find that the ſalt called nitre would ferment with vinegar, and had an abſterſive quality, properties which perfectly agree with this ſalt, but not with ſalt-petre, as do many different qualities aſcribed to it by the ancients. Hill on Foſſils.

Some tumultuous cloud,
Inſtinct with fire and nitre, hurried him. Milton.
Some ſteep their ſeed, and ſome in cauldrons boil,
With vigorous nitre and with lees of oil. Dryden.

Ni´trous. adj. [nitreux, French; from nitre.] Impregnated with nitre; conſiſting of nitre.

Earth and water, mingled by the heat of the ſun, gather nitrous fatneſs more than either of them have ſeverally. Bacon.

The northern air being more fully charged with thoſe particles ſuppoſed nitrous, which are the aliment of fire, is fitteſt to maintain the vital heat in that activity which is ſufficient to move ſuch an unwieldy bulk with due celerity. Ray.

He to quench his drought ſo much inclin'd,
May ſnowy fields and nitrous paſtures find,
Meet ſtores of cold ſo greedily purſu'd,
And be refreſh'd with never-waſting food. Blackmore.

Ni´try. adj. [from nitre.] Nitrous.

Winter my theme confines; whoſe nitry wind
Shall cruſt the ſlabby mire, and kennels bind. Gay.

Ni´ttily. adv. [from nitty.] Louſily.

One Bell was put to death at Tyburn for moving a new rebellion; he was a man nittily needy, and therefore adventrous. Hayward.

Ni´tty. adj. [from nit.] Abounding with the eggs of lice.

Ni´veous. adj. [niveus, Latin.] Snowy; reſembling ſnow.

Cinabar becomes red by the acid exhalation of ſulphur, which otherways preſents a pure and niveous white. Brown.

Ni´zy. n. ſ. [from niais.] A dunce; a ſimpleton. A low word.

True critics laugh, and bid the trifling niſy
Go read Quintilian. Anon.

NO. adv. [na, Saxon.]

Notwithsta´nding. conj. [This word, though in conformity to other writers called here a conjunction, is properly a participial adjective, as it is compounded of not and withſtanding, and anſwers exactly to the Latin non obſtante; it is moſt properly and analogically uſed in the ablative caſe abſolute with a noun; as, he is rich notwithſtanding his loſs; it is not ſo proper to ſay, he is rich notwithſtanding he has loſt much; yet this mode of writing is too frequent. Addiſon has uſed it: but when a ſentence follows, it is more grammatical to inſert that; as, he is rich notwithſtanding that he has loſt much. When notwithſtanding is uſed abſolutely, the expreſſion is elliptical, this or that being underſtood, as in the following paſſages of Hooker.]

1. Without hindrance or obſtruction from.

Thoſe on whom Chriſt beſtowed miraculous cures, were ſo tranſported that their gratitude made them, notwithſtanding his prohibition, proclaim the wonders he had done for them. Decay of Piety.

2. Although. This uſe is not proper.

A perſon languiſhing under an ill habit of body, may loſe ſeveral ounces of blood, notwithſtanding it will weaken him for a time, in order to put a new ferment into the remaining maſs, and draw into it freſh ſupplies. Addiſon.

3. Neverthelеſs; however.

They which honour the law as an image of the wiſdom of God himſelf, are notwithſtanding to know that the ſame had an end in Chriſt. Hooker.

The knowledge is ſmall, which we have on earth concerning things that are done in heaven: notwithſtanding this much we know even of ſaints in heaven, that they pray. Hooker.

He hath a tear for pity, and a hand
Open as day, for melting charity:
Yet notwithſtanding, being incens'd, he's flint;
As humorous as winter. Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

NO´TUS. n. ſ. [Latin.] The ſouthwind.

I' th' ſwathing cloaths, the other from their nurſery
Were ſtol'n. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

You ſee before you the ſpectacle of a Plantagenet, who hath been carried from the nurſery to the ſanctuary, from the ſanctuary to the direful priſon, from the priſon to the hand of the cruel tormentor, and from that hand to the wide wilderneſs; for ſo the world hath been to me. Bacon.

Forthwith the devil did appear,
Not in the ſhape in which he plies
At miſs's elbow when ſhe lies;
Or ſtands before the nurs'ry doors,
To take the naughty boy that roars. Prior.

They have publick nurſeries, where all parents are obliged to ſend their infants to be educated. Swift.

5. The place or ſtate where any thing is foſtered or brought up, from a nurſery of children; or whence any thing is to be removed, from a nurſery of trees.

This keeping of cows is of itſelf a very idle life, and a fit nurſery for a thief. Spenſer on Ireland.

To ſee fair Padua, nurſery of arts,
I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy. Shakeſpeare.

A luxurious court is the nurſery of diſeaſes; it breeds them, it encourages, nouriſhes, and entertains them. L'Eſtrange.

A nurſery erects its head,
Where queens are form'd and future heroes bred;
Where unfledg'd actors learn to laugh and cry. Dryden.

Nu´rsling. n. ſ. [from nurſe.] One nurſed up; a fondling.

Then was ſhe held in ſovereign dignity,
And made the nurſling of nobility. Spenſer.

I was his nurſling once, and choice delight,
His deſtin'd from the womb. Milton's Agoniſtes.

In their tender nonage, while they ſpread
Their ſpringing leaves and lift their infant head,
Indulge their childhood, and the nurſling ſpare. Dryden.

NU´RTURE. n. ſ. [contracted from nourriture, Fr.]

1. Food; diet.

For this did th' angel twice deſcend?
Ordain'd thy nurture holy, as of a plant
Select and ſacred. Milton's Agoniſtes.

2. Education; inſtitution. Little uſed.

She ſhould take order for bringing up of wards in good nurture, not ſuffer them to come into bad hands. Spenſer.

The thorny point
Of bare diſtreſs, hath ta'en from me the ſhew
Of ſmooth civility; yet am I inland bred,
And know ſome nurture. Shakeſpeare's As you like it.

To Nu´rture. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To educate; to train; to bring up.

Thou broughteſt it up with thy righteouſneſs, and nurturedſt it in thy law, and reformedſt it with thy judgment. 2 Eſdr. viii. 12.

He was nurtured where he had been born in his firſt rudiments, till the years of ten. Wotton.

When an inſolent deſpiſer of diſcipline, nurtured into impudence, ſhall appear before a church governour, ſeverity and reſolution are that governour's virtues. South.

2. To nurture up; to bring by care and food to maturity.

They ſuppoſe mother earth to be a great animal, and to have nurtured up her young offſpring with a conſcious tenderneſs. Bentley.

To Nu´stle. v. a. To fondle; to cheriſh. Corrupted from nurſle. See Nuzzle. Ainſworth.

NUT. n. ſ. [hnuꞇ, Saxon; noot, Dutch; noix, Fr.]

1. The fruit of certain trees; it conſiſts of a kernel covered by a hard ſhell. If the ſhell and kernel are in the centre of a pulpy fruit, they then make not a nut but a ſtone.

One chanc'd to find a nut
In the end of which a hole was cut,
Which lay upon a hazel root,
There ſcatter'd by a ſquirrel;
Which out the kernel gotten had;
When quoth this Fay, dear queen be glad,
Let Oberon be ne'er ſo mad,
I'll ſet you ſafe from peril. Drayton's Nymphid.

Nuts are hard of digeſtion, yet poſſeſs ſome good medicinal qualities. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. A ſmall body with teeth, which correſpond with the teeth of wheels.

This faculty may be more conveniently uſed by the multiplication of ſeveral wheels, together with nuts belonging unto each, that are uſed for the roaſting of meat. Wilkins.

Clocks and jacks, though the ſcrews and teeth of the wheels and nuts be never ſo ſmooth, yet if they be not oiled, will hardly move. Ray.

Nu´tbrown. adj. [nut and brown.] Brown like a nut kept long.

Young and old come forth to play,
Till the live-long daylight fail,
Then to the ſpicy nutbrown ale. Milton's Poems.

When this nutbrown ſword was out,
With ſtomach huge he laid about. Hudibras.

Two milk-white kids run friſking by her ſide,
For which the nutbrown laſs, Erithacis,
Full often offer'd many a ſavoury kiſs. Dryden.

King Hardicnute, 'midſt Danes and Saxons ſtout,
Carous'd in nutbrown ale, and din'd on grout. King.

Nu´tcrackers. n. ſ. [nut and crack.] An inſtrument uſed to encloſe nuts and break them by preſſure.

He caſt every human feature out of his countenance, and became a pair of nutcrackers. Addiſon's Spectator.

Nu´tgall. n. ſ. [nut and gall.] Hard excreſcence of an oak.

In vegetable excretions, maggots terminate in flies of conſtant ſhapes, as in the nutgalls of the outlandiſh oak. Brown.

Nu´thatch. }
Nu´tjobber. } n. ſ. [picus martius.] A bird. Ainſ.
Nu´tpecker. }

Nu´thook. n. ſ. [nut and hook.]

1. A ſtick with a hook at the end to pull down boughs that the nuts may be gathered.

2. It was anciently, I know not why, a name of contempt.

Nuthook, nuthook, you lie. Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

Nu´tmeg. n. ſ. [nut and mugueſt, French.]

The nutmeg is a kernel of a large fruit not unlike the peach, and ſeparated from that and from its inveſtient coat, the mace, before it is ſent over to us; except that the whole fruit is ſometimes ſent over in preſerve, by way of ſweet-meat of as a curioſity. There are two kinds of nutmeg; the male, which is long and cylindrical, but it has leſs of the fine aromatick flavour than the female, which is of the ſhape of an olive. Hill.

The ſecond integument, a dry and floſculous coat, commonly called mace; the fourth, a kernel included in the ſhell, which lieth under the mace, is the ſame we call nutmeg. Brown.

I to my pleaſant gardens went,
Where nutmegs breathe a fragrant ſcent. Sandys.

Nu´tshell. n. ſ. [nut and ſhell.]

1. The hard ſubſtance that incloſes the kernel of the nut.

I could be bounded in a nutſhell, and count myſelf a king of infinite ſpace. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

It ſeems as eaſy to me, to have the idea of ſpace empty of body, as to think of the hollow of a nutſhell without a kernel. Locke.

2. It is uſed proverbially for any thing of little value.

A fox had me by the back, and a thouſand pound to a nutſhell, I had never got off again. L'Eſtrange.

Nu´ttree. n. ſ. [nut and tree.] A tree that bears nuts.

Of trees you ſhall have the nuttree and the oak. Peacham.

Like beating nuttrees, makes a larger crop. Dryden.

Nutrica´tion. n. ſ. [nutricatio, Latin.] Manner of feeding or being fed.

Beſides the teeth, the tongue of this animal is a ſecond argument to overthrow this airy nutrication. Brown.

NU´TRIMENT. n. ſ. [nutrimentum, Latin.] That which feeds or nouriſhes; food; aliment.

This ſlave
Has my lord's meat in him,
Why ſhould it thrive and turn to nutriment? Shakeſpeare.

The ſtomach returns what it has received, in ſtrength and nutriment, diffuſed into all the parts of the body. South.

Does not the body thrive and grow,
By food of twenty years ago?
And is not virtue in mankind,
The nutriment that feeds the mind? Swift's Miſcellanies.

Nutrime´ntal. adj. [from nutriment.] Having the qualities of food; alimental.

By virtue of this oil vegetables are nutrimental, for this oil is extracted by animal digeſtion as an emulſion. Arbuthnot.

Nutri´tion. n. ſ. [from nutritio, nutrio, Latin; nutrition, French.]

1. The act or quality of nouriſhing, ſupporting ſtrength, or encreaſing growth.

New parts are added to our ſubſtance to ſupply our continual decayings; nor can we give a certain account how the aliment is ſo prepared for nutrition, or by what mechaniſm it is ſo regularly diſtributed. Glanville's Scepſis.

The obſtruction of the glands of the meſentery is a great impediment to nutrition; for the lymph in thoſe glands is a neceſſary conſtituent of the aliment before it mixeth with the blood. Arbuthnot.

2. That which nouriſhes; nutriment. Leſs properly.

Fix'd like a plant on his peculiar ſpot,
To draw nutrition, propagate, and rot. Pope.

Nutri´tious. adj. [from nutrio, Lat.] Having the quality of nouriſhing.

O may'ſt thou often ſee
Thy furrows whiten'd by the woolly rain
Nutritious! ſecret nitre lurks within. Philips.

The heat equal to incubation is only nutritious; and the nutritious juice itſelf reſembles the white of an egg in all its qualities. Arbuth.

Nu´tritive. adj. [from nutrio, Latin.] Nouriſhing; nutrimental; alimental.

While the ſecretory, or ſeparating glands, are too much widened and extended, they ſuffer a great quantity of nutritive juice to paſs through. Blackmore.

Nu´triture. n. ſ. [from nutrio, Lat.] The power of nouriſhing. Not uſed.

Never make a meal of fleſh alone, have ſome other meat with it of leſs nutriture. Harvey on Conſumptions.

To Nu´zzle. v. a. [This word, in its original ſignification, ſeems corrupted from nurſle; but when its original meaning was forgotten, writers ſuppoſed it to come from nozzle or noſe, and in that ſenſe uſed it.]

1. To nurſe; to foſter.

Old men long nozzled in corruption, ſcorning them that would ſeek reformation. Sidney.

2. To go with the noſe down like a hog.

He charged through an army of lawyers, ſometimes with ſword in hand, at other times nuzzling like an eel in the mud. Arbuthnot.

Sir Roger ſhook his ears, and nuzzled along, well ſatisfied that he was doing a charitable work. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

The bleſſed benefit, not there confin'd,
Drops to the third, who nuzzles cloſe behind. Pope.

Nymph. n. ſ. [νύμφη; nympha, Latin.]

1. A goddeſs of the woods, meadows, or waters.

And as the moiſture which the thirſty earth
Sucks from the ſea, to fill her empty veins,
From out her womb at laſt doth take a birth,
And runs a nymph along the graſſy plains. Davies.

2. A lady. In poetry.

This reſolve no mortal dame,
None but thoſe eyes cou'd have o'erthrown;
The nymph I dare not, need not name. Waller.

Ny´mphish. adj. [from nymph.] Relating to nymphs; ladylike.

Tending all to nymphiſh war. Drayton.

Nys. [A corruption of ne is.] None is; not is. Obſolete.

Thou findeſt fault, where nys to be found,
And buildeſt ſtrong work upon a weak ground. Spenſer.

O.

O.

O Has in Engliſh a long ſound; as, drone, groan, ſtone, alone, cloke, broke, coal, droll; or ſhort, got, knot, ſhot, prong, long. It is uſually denoted long by a ſervile a ſubjoined; as, moan, or by e at the end of the ſyllable; as, bone: when theſe vowels are not appended, it is generally ſhort, except before ll; as, droll, ſcroll, and even then ſometimes ſhort; as, loll.

1. O is uſed as an interjection of wiſhing or exclamation.

O that we, who have reſiſted all the deſigns of his love, would now try to defeat that of his anger! Decay of Piety.

O! were he preſent, that his eyes and hands
Might ſee, and urge, the death which he commands. Dryden.

2. O is uſed with no great elegance by Shakeſpeare for a circle or oval.

Can this cockpit hold
The vaſty field of France? or may we cram
Within this wooden O, the very caſks
That did affright the air at Agincourt. Shakeſpeare.

OAF. n. ſ. [This word is variouſly written; auff, ofe, and oph; it ſeems a corruption of ouph, a demon or fairy; in German alf, from which elf: and means properly the ſame with changeling; a fooliſh child left by malevolent ouphs or fairies, in the place of one more witty, which they ſteal away.]

1. A changeling; a fooliſh child left by the fairies.

Theſe, when a child haps to be got,
Which after proves an idiot,
When folk perceives it thriveth not,
The fault therein to ſmother:
Some ſilly doating brainleſs calf,
That underſtands things by the half,
Says that the fairy left this oaf,
And took away the other. Drayton's Nimphid.

2. A dolt; a blockhead; an idiot.

OA´FISH. adj. [from oaf.] Stupid; dull; doltiſh.

OA´FISHNESS. n. ſ. [from oafiſh.] Stupidity; dulneſs.

OAK. n. ſ. [ac, æc, Saxon; which, ſays Skinner, to ſhew how eaſy it is to play the fool, under a ſhew of literature and deep reſearches, I will, for the diverſion of my reader, derive from οἶκος, a houſe; the oak being the beſt timber for building. Skinner ſeems to have had Junius in his thoughts, who on this very word has ſhewn his uſual fondneſs for Greek etymology, by a derivation more ridiculous than that by which Skinner has ridiculed him. Ac or oak, ſays the grave critick, ſignified among the Saxons, like robur among the Latins, not only an oak but ſtrength, and may be well enough derived, non incommode deduci poteſt, from ἀλκὴ, ſtrength; by taking the three firſt letters, and then ſinking the λ, as is not uncommon; quercus.]

The oak-tree hath male flowers, or katkins, which conſiſt of a great number of ſmall ſlender threads. The embryos, which are produced at remote diſtances from theſe on the ſame tree, do afterwards become acorns, which are produced in hard ſcaly cups: the leaves are ſinuated. The ſpecies are five. Miller.

He return'd with his brows bound with oak. Shakeſpeare.

He lay along
Under an oak, whoſe antique root peeps out
Upon the brook that brawls along this wood. Shakeſpeare.

No tree beareth ſo many baſtard fruits as the oak: for beſides the acorns, it beareth galls, oak apples, oak nuts, which are inflammable, and oak berries, ſticking cloſe to the body of the tree without ſtalk. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots riſing up, and ſpreads by ſlow degrees:
Three centuries he grows, and three he ſtays
Supreme in ſtate; and in three more decays. Dryden.

An oak growing from a plant to a great tree, and then lopped, is ſtill the ſame oak. Locke.

A light earthy, ſtony, and ſparry matter, incruſted and affixed to oak leaves. Woodward on Foſſils.

Let India boaſt her plants, nor envy we
The weeping amber and the balmy tree,
While by our oaks the precious loads are born,
And realms commanded which thoſe trees adorn. Pope.

OAK Evergreen. n. ſ. [ilex.]

The fruit is an acorn like the common oak. The wood of this tree is accounted very good for many ſorts of tools and utenſils; and affords the moſt durable charcoal in the world. Miller.

OAKA´PPLE. n. ſ. [oak and apple.] A kind of ſpongy excreſcence on the oak.

Another kind of excreſcence is an exudation of plants joined with putrefaction, as in oakapples, which are found chiefly upon the leaves of oaks. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

OA´KEN. adj. [from oak.] Made of oak; gathered from oak.

No nation doth equal England for oaken timber wherewith to build ſhips. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

By lot from Jove I am the pow'r
Of this fair wood, and live in oaken bow'r. Milton.

Clad in white velvet all their troop they led,
With each an oaken chaplet on his head. Dryden.

An oaken garland to be worn on feſtivals, was the recompenſe of one who had covered a citizen in battle. Addiſon.

He ſnatched a good tough oaken cudgel, and began to brandiſh it. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

OA´KENPIN. n. ſ. An apple.

Oakenpin, ſo called from its hardneſs, is a laſting fruit, yields excellent liquor, and is near the nature of the Weſtbury apple, though not in form. Mortimer.

OA´KUM. n. ſ. [A word probably formed by ſome corruption.] Cords untwiſted and reduced to hemp, with which, mingled with pitch, leaks are ſtopped.

They make their oakum, wherewith they chalk the ſeams of the ſhips of old ſeer and weather-beaten ropes, when they are over ſpent and grown ſo rotten as they ſerve for no other uſe but to make rotten oakum, which moulders and waſhes away with every ſea as the ſhips labour and are toſſed. Raleigh.

Some drive old oakum thro' each ſeam and rift;
Their left hand does the calking-iron guide;
The rattling mallet with the right they lift. Dryden.

OAR. n. ſ. [ape, Saxon; perhaps by alluſion to the common expreſſion of plowing the water, from the ſame root with ear, to plow; aro, Latin.] A long pole with a broad end, by which veſſels are driven in the water, the reſiſtance made by water to the oar puſhing on the veſſel.

Th' oars were ſilver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept ſtroke, and made
The water which they beat, to follow faſter,
As amorous of their ſtrokes. Shakeſpeare's Ant. and Cleop.

So tow'rds a ſhip the oar-finn'd gallies ply,
Which wanting ſea to ride, or wind to fly,
Stands but to fall reveng'd. Denham's Poems.

In ſhipping ſuch as this, the Iriſh kern
And untaught Indian, on the ſtream did glide,
E'er ſharp-keel'd boats to ſtem the flood did learn,
Or fin-like oars did ſpread from either ſide. Dryden.

Its progreſſive motion may be effected by the help of ſeveral oars, which in the outward ends of them ſhall be like the fins of a fiſh to contract and dilate. Wilkins.

To OAR. v. n. [from the noun.] To row.

He more undaunted on the ruin rode,
And oar'd with labouring arms along the flood. Pope.

To OAR. v. a. To impel by rowing.

His bold head
'Bove the contentious waves he kept, and oar'd
Himſelf with his good arms in luſty ſtrokes
To th' ſhore. Shakeſpeare's Tempeſt.

OA´RY. adj. [from oar.] Having the form or uſe of oars.

The ſwan with arched neck,
Between her white wings mantling, proudly rows
Her ſtate with oary feet. Milton.

His hair transforms to down, his fingers meet,
In ſkinny films, and ſhape his oary feet. Addiſon.

OAST. n. ſ. A kiln. Not in uſe.

Empty the binn into a hog-bag, and carry them immediately to the oaſt or kiln, to be dried. Mortimer.

OATCA´KE. n. ſ. [oat and cake.] Cake made of the meal of oats.

Take a blue ſtone they make haver or oatcakes upon, and lay it upon the croſs bars of iron. Peacham.

OA´TEN. adj. [from oat.] Made of oats; bearing oats.

When ſhepherds pipe on oaten ſtraws,
And merry larks are ploughmens clocks. Shakeſpeare.

OATH. n. ſ. [aith, Gothick; að, Saxon. The diſtance between the noun oath, and the verb ſwear, is very obſervable, as it may ſhew that our oldeſt dialect is formed from different languages.] An affirmation, negation, or promiſe, corroborated by the atteſtation of the Divine Being.

Read over Julia's heart, thy firſt beſt love,
For whoſe dear ſake thou then did'ſt rend thy faith
Into a thouſand oaths; and all thoſe oaths
Deſcended into perjury to love me. Shakeſpeare.

All the oath-rites ſaid,
I then aſcended her adorned bed. Chapman.

We have conſultations, which inventions ſhall be publiſhed, which not: and take an oath of ſecrecy for the concealing of thoſe which we think fit to keep ſecret. Bacon.

Thoſe called to any office of truſt, are bound by an oath to the faithful diſcharge of it: but an oath is an appeal to God, and therefore can have no influence, except upon thoſe who believe that he is. Swift.

OA´THABLE. adj. [from oath. A word not uſed.] Capable of having an oath adminiſtered.

You're not oathable,
Altho' I know you'll ſwear
Into ſtrong ſhudders th' immortal gods. Shakeſpeare.

OATHBREA´KING. n. ſ. [oath and break.] Perjury; the violation of an oath.

His oathbreaking he mended thus,
By now forſwearing that he is forſworn. Shakeſp. Hen. IV.

OA´TMALT. n. ſ. [oat and malt.] Malt made of oats.

In Kent they brew with one half oatmalt, and the other half barleymalt. Mortimer.

OA´TMEAL. n. ſ. [oat and meal.] Flower made by grinding oats.

Oatmeal and butter, outwardly applied, dry the ſcab on the head. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Our neighbours tell me oft, in joking talk,
Of aſhes, leather, oatmeal, bran, and chalk. Gay.

OA´TMEAL. n. ſ. [panicum.] An herb. Ainſworth.

OATS. n. ſ. [aten, Saxon.] A grain, which in England is generally given to horſes, but in Scotland ſupports the people.

It is of the graſs leaved tribe; the flowers have no petals, and are diſpoſed in a looſe panicle: the grain is eatable. The meal makes tolerable good bread. Miller.

The oats have eaten the horſes. Shakeſpeare.

It is bare mechaniſm, no otherwiſe produced than the turning of a wild oatbeard, by the inſinuation of the particles of moiſture. Locke.

For your lean cattle, fodder them with barley ſtraw firſt, and the oat ſtraw laſt. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

His horſe's allowance of oats and beans, was greater than the journey required. Swift.

OA´TTHISTLE. n. ſ. [oat and thiſtle.] An herb. Ainſ.

OBAMBULA´TION. n. ſ. [obambulatio, from obambulo, Latin.] The act of walking about. Dict.

To OBDU´CE. v. a. [obduco, Latin.] To draw over as a covering.

No animal exhibits its face in the native colour of its ſkin but man; all others are covered with feathers, hair, or a cortex that is obduced over the cutis. Hale.

OBDUC´TION. n. ſ. [from obductio, obduco, Lat.] The act of covering, or laying a cover.

OBDU´RACY. n. ſ. [from obdurate.] Inflexible wickedneſs; impenitence; hardneſs of heart.

Thou think'ſt me as far in the Devil's book, as thou and Falſtaff, for obduracy and perſiſtency. Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

God may, by a mighty grace, hinder the abſolute completion of ſin in final obduracy. South.

OBDU´RATE. adj. [obduratus, Latin.]

1. Hard of heart; inflexibly obſtinate in ill; hardned; impenitent.

Oh! let me teach thee for thy father's ſake,
That gave thee life, when well he might have ſlain thee;
Be not obdurate, open thy deaf ears. Shakeſpeare.

If when you make your pray'rs,
God ſhould be ſo obdurate as yourſelves,
How would it fare with your departed ſouls? Shakeſpeare.

Women are ſoft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou ſtern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorſeleſs. Shakeſpeare.

To convince the proud what ſigns avail,
Or wonders move th' obdurate to relent;
They harden'd more, by what might more reclaim. Milton.

Obdurate as you are, oh! hear at leaſt
My dying prayers, and grant my laſt requeſt. Dryden.

2. Hardned; firm; ſtubborn: always with ſome degree of evil.

Sometimes the very cuſtom of evil makes the heart obdurate againſt whatſoever inſtructions to the contrary. Hooker.

A pleaſing ſorcery could charm
Pain for a while, or anguiſh, and excite
Fallacious hope, or arm th' obdurate breaſt
With ſtubborn patience, as with triple ſteel. Milton.

No ſuch thought ever ſtrikes his marble, obdurate heart, but it preſently flies off and rebounds from it. It is impoſſible for a man to be thorough paced in ingratitude, till he has ſhook off all fetters of pity and compaſſion. South.

3. Harſh; rugged.

They joined the moſt obdurate conſonants without one intervening vowel. Swift.

OBDU´RATELY. adv. [from obdurate.] Stubbornly; inflexibly; impenitently.

OBDU´RATENESS. n. ſ. [from obdurate.] Stubbornneſs; inflexibility; impenitence.

OBDURA´TION. n. ſ. [from obdurate.] Hardneſs of heart; ſtubbornneſs.

What occaſion it had given them to think, to their greater obduration in evil, that through a froward and wanton deſire of innovation, we did conſtrainedly thoſe things, for which conſcience was pretended? Hooker.

This barren ſeaſon is always the reward of obſtinate obduration. Hammond.

OBDU´RED. adj. [obduratus, Latin.] Hardned; inflexible; impenitent.

This ſaw his hapleſs foes, but ſtood obdur'd,
And to rebellious fight rallied their pow'rs
Inſenſate. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

OBE´DIENCE. n. ſ. [obedience, Fr. obedientia, Latin.] Obſequiouſneſs; ſubmiſſion to authority; compliance with command or prohibition.

If you violently proceed againſt him, it would ſhake in pieces the heart of his obedience. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

Thy huſband
Craves no other tribute at thy hands,
But love, fair looks, and true obedience. Shakeſpeare.

His ſervants ye are, to whom ye obey, whether of ſin unto death, or of obedience unto righteouſneſs. Rom. iv. 16.

It was both a ſtrange commiſſion, and a ſtrange obedience to a commiſſion, for men ſo furiouſly aſſailed, to hold their hands. Bacon.

In vain thou bidſt me to forbear,
Obedience were rebellion here. Cowley.

Nor can this be,
But by fulfilling that which thou didſt want,
Obedience to the law of God, impos'd
On penalty of death. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

We muſt beg the grace and aſſiſtance of God's ſpirit to enable us to forſake our ſins, and to walk in obedience to him. Duty of Man.

The obedience of men is to imitate the obedience of angels, and rational beings on earth, are to live unto God, as rational beings in heaven live unto him. Law.

OBE´DIENT. adj. [obediens, Latin.] Submiſſive to authority; compliant with command or prohibition; obſequious.

To this end did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be obedient in all things. 2 Cor. ii. 9.

To this her mother's plot
She, ſeemingly obedient, likewiſe hath Made promiſe. Shakeſpeare's Merry Wives of Windſor.

Religion hath a good influence upon the people, to make them obedient to government, and peaceable one towards another. Tillotſon.

The chief his orders gives; th' obedient band,
With due obſervance, wait the chief's command. Pope.

OBEDIE´NTIAL. adj. [obedientiel, French; from obedient.] According to the rule of obedience.

Faith is ſuch as God will accept of, when it affords fiducial reliance on the promiſes, and obediential ſubmiſſion to the command. Hammond.

Faith is then perfect, when it produces in us a fiduciary aſſent to whatever the goſpel has revealed, and an obediential ſubmiſſion to the commands. Wake's Prep. for Death.

OBE´DIENTLY. adv. [from obedient.] With obedience.

Religion obliges men to the practice of thoſe virtues which conduce to the preſervation of our health. Tillotſon.

The law muſt oblige in all precepts, or in none. If it oblige in all, all are to be obeyed; if it oblige in none, it has no longer the authority of a law. Rogers.

2. To indebt; to lay obligations of gratitude.

He that depends upon another, muſt
Oblige his honour with a boundleſs truſt. Waller.
Since love obliges not, I from this hour
Aſſume the right of man's deſpotic power. Dryden.
Vain wretched creature, how art thou miſled,
To think thy wit theſe godlike notions bred!
Theſe truths are not the product of thy mind,
But dropt from heav'n, and of a nobler kind:
Reveal'd religion firſt inform'd thy ſight,
And reaſon ſaw not, till faith ſprung the light.
Thus man by his own ſtrength to heaven would ſoar,
And would not be obliged to God for more. Dryden.
When int'reſt calls off all her ſneaking train,
When all th' oblig'd deſert, and all the vain,
She waits or to the ſcaffold or the cell. Pope.

To thoſe hills we are obliged for all our metals, and with them for all the conveniencies and comforts of life. Bentley.

3. To pleaſe; to gratify.

A great man gets more by obliging his inferiour, than by diſdaining him; as a man has a greater advantage by ſowing and dreſſing his ground, than he can have by trampling upon it. South.

Some natures are ſo ſour and ſo ungrateful, that they are never to be obliged. L'Eſtrange.

Happy the people, who preſerve their honour,
By the ſame duties that oblige their prince! Addiſon's Cato.

The oneey'd heroe on his elephant. Dryden.

The mighty family
Of oneey'd brothers haſten to the ſhore. Addiſon.

Oneirocri'tical. adj. [ὀνειροκριτικὸς, Gr. oneirocritique, Fr. it ſhould therefore according to analogy be written onirocritical and onirocritick.] Interpretative of dreams.

If a man has no mind to paſs by abruptly from his imagined to his real circumſtances, he may employ himſelf in that new kind of obſervation which my oneirocritical correſpondent has directed him to make. Addiſon's Spectator.

Oneirocri'tick. n. ſ. [ὀνειροκριτικὸς, Gr.] An intepreter of dreams.

Having ſurveyed all ranks and profeſſions, I do not find in any quarter of the town an oneirocritick, or an interpreter of dreams. Addiſon's Spectator.

O'neness. n. ſ. [from one.] Unity; the quality of being one.

Our God is one, or rather very oneneſs and mere unity, having nothing but itſelf in itſelf, and not conſiſting, as all things do beſides God, of many things. Hooker.

The oneneſs of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, referring to the ſeveral hypoſtaſes, is the one eternal indiviſible divine nature, and the eternity of the ſon's generation, and his co-eternity, and his conſubſtantiality with the Father when he came down from Heaven and was incarnate. Hammond.

O'nerary. adj. [onerarius, Lat. oneraiſe, French.] Fitted for carriage or burthens; compriſing a burthen.

To O'nerate. v. a. [onero, Lat.] To load; to burthen.

Onera'tion. n. ſ. [from onerate.] The act of loading. Dict.

O'nerous. adj. [onereux, French; oneroſus, Latin.] Burthenſome; oppreſſive.

A baniſhed perſon, abſent out of neceſſity, retains all things onerous to himſelf, as a puniſhment for his crime. Ayliffe.

O'nion. n. ſ. [oignon, Fr. cæpe, Latin.] A plant.

If the boy have not a woman's gift
To rain a ſhower of commanded tears,
An onion will do well. Shakeſpeare's Taming of the Shrew.

I an aſs, am onion-ey'd. Shakeſpeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

This is ev'ry cook's opinion,
No ſav'ry diſh without an onion;
But leſt your kiſſing ſhould be ſpoil'd,
Your onions muſt be throughly boil'd. Swift.

O'nly. adj. [from one, onely, or onelike.]

1. Single; one and no more.

Of all whom fortune to my ſword did bring,
This only man was worth the conquering. Dryden.

2. This and no other.

The only child of ſhadeful Savernake. Drayton.

The logick now in uſe has long poſſeſſed the chair, as the only art taught in the ſchools for the direction of the mind in the ſtudy of the ſciences. Locke.

3. This above all other: as, he is the only man for muſick.

O'nly. adv.

1. Simply; ſingly; merely; barely.

I propoſe my thoughts only as conjectures. Burnet.

The poſterity of the wicked inherit the fruit of their fathers vices; and that not only by a juſt judgment, but from the natural courſe of things. Tillotſon.

All who deſerve his love, he makes his own;
And to be lov'd himſelf, needs only to be known. Dryden.

The practice of virtue is attended not only with preſent quiet and ſatisfaction, but with comfortable hope of a future recompence. Nelſon.

Nor muſt this contrition be exerciſed by us, only for groſſer evils; but when we live the beſt. Wake.

2. So and no otherwiſe.

Every imagination of the thoughts of his heart, was only evil continually. Geneſis, vi. 5.

3. Singly without more: as, only begotten.

O'nomancy. n. ſ. [ὄνομα and μαντεία.] Divination by a name.

Deſtinies were ſuperſtitiouſly, by onomancy, deciphered out of names, as though the names and natures of men were ſuitable, and fatal neceſſities concurred herein with voluntary motion. Camden.

Onoma'ntical. adj. [ὄνομα and μάντις.] Predicting by names.

Theodatus, when curious to know the ſucceſs of his wars againſt the Romans, an onomantical or name-wiſard Jew, willed him to ſhut up a number of ſwine and give ſome of them Roman names, others Gothiſh names with ſeveral marks, and there to leave them. Camden.

O'nset. n. ſ. [on and ſet.]

1. Attack; ſtorm; aſſault; firſt brunt.

As well the ſoldier dieth, which ſtandeth ſtill, as he that gives the braveſt onſet. Sidney.

All breathleſs, weary, faint,
Him ſpying, with freſh onſet he aſſail'd,
And kindling new his courage, ſeeming queint,
Struck him ſo hugely, that through great conſtraint
He made him ſtoop. Spenſer.

The ſhout
Of battle now began, and ruſhing ſound
Of onſet. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Sometimes it gains a point; and preſently it finds itſelf baffled and beaten off; yet ſtill it renews the onſet, attacks the difficulty afreſh; plants this reaſoning and that argument, like ſo many intellectual batteries, till at length it forces a way into the obſtinate encloſed truth. South.

Without men and proviſions it is impoſſible to ſecure conqueſts that are made in the firſt onſets of an invaſion. Addiſon.

Obſerve
The firſt impetuous onſets of his grief;
Uſe every artifice to keep him ſtedfaſt. Philips.

2. Something added or ſet on by way of ornamental appendage. This ſenſe, ſays Nicholſon, is ſtill retained in Northumberland, where onſet means a tuft.

I will with deeds requite thy gentleneſs;
And for an onſet, Titus, to advance
Thy name and honourable family,
Lavinia will I make my empreſs. Shakeſp. Titus Andronicus.

To O'nset. v. a. [from the noun.] To ſet upon; to begin. Not uſed.

This for a while was hotly onſetted and a reaſonable price offered, but ſoon cooled again. Carew.

O'nslaught. n. ſ. [on and ſlay. See Slaughter.] Attack; ſtorm; onſet. Not in uſe.

They made a halt
To view the ground, and where t' aſſault,
Then call'd a council, which was beſt,
By ſiege or onſlaught to inveſt
The enemy; and 'twas agreed
By ſtorm and onſlaught to proceed. Hudibras.

Onto'logist. n. ſ. [from ontology.] One who conſiders the affections of being in general; a metaphyſician.

Onto'logy. n. ſ. [ὄντα and λόγος.] The ſcience of the affections of being in general; metaphyſicks.

The modes, accidents and relations that belong to various beings, are copiouſly treated of in metaphyſicks, or more properly ontology. Watts's Logick.

O'nward. adv. [onƿeaꞃd, Saxon.]

1. Forward; progreſſively.

My lord,
When you went onward to this ended action,
I look'd upon her with a ſoldier's eye. Shakeſpeare.

Satan was now at hand, and from his ſeat,
The monſter moving onward, came as faſt
With horrid ſtrides. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Him thro' the ſpicy foreſt onward come
Adam diſcern'd, as in the door he ſat
Of his cool bow'r. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Not one looks backward, onward ſtill he goes,
Yet ne'er looks forward farther than his noſe. Pope.

2. In a ſtate of advanced progreſſion.

Philoxenus came to ſee how onward the fruits were of his friend's labour. Sidney.

You are already ſo far onward of your way, that you have forſaken the imitation of ordinary converſe. Dryden.

3. Somewhat farther.

A little onward lend thy guiding hand
To theſe dark ſteps, a little farther on. Milton.

O'nycha. n. ſ. It is found in two different ſenſes in ſcripture.—The odoriferous ſnail or ſhell, and the ſtone onyx. The greateſt part of commentators explain it by the onyx or odoriferous ſhell. The onyx is fiſhed for in the Indies, where grows the ſpicanardi, the food of this fiſh and what makes its ſhell ſo aromatick. Calmet.

Take ſweet ſpices, onycha, and galbanum. Exodus, xxx. 34.

O'nyx. n. ſ. [ὄνυξ.] The onyx is a ſemipellucid gem, of which there are ſeveral ſpecies, but the blueiſh white kind, with brown and white zones, is the true onyx legitima of the ancients. Hill's Materia Medica.

Nor are her rare endowments to be ſold
For glittering ſand by Ophir ſhown,
The blue-ey'd ſaphir, or rich onyx ſtone. Sandys.

The onyx is an accidental variety of the agat kind: it is of a dark horny colour, in which is a plate of a bluiſh white, and ſometimes of red: when on one or both ſides the white, there happens to be alſo a plate of a reddiſh or freſh colour, the jewellers call the ſtone a ſardonyx. Woodward on Foſſils.

OOZE. n. ſ. [either from eaux, waters, French; or or þæƿ, wetneſs, Saxon.]

1. Soft mud; mire at the bottom of water; ſlime.

My ſon i' th' ooze is bedded. Shakeſpeare's Tempeſt.

Some carried up into their grounds the ooze or ſalt water mud, and found good profit thereby. Carew.

Old father Thames rais'd up his rev'rend head,
Deep in his ooze he ſought his ſedgy bed,
And ſhrunk his waters back into his urn. Dryden.

2. Soft flow; ſpring. This ſeems to be the meaning in Prior.

From his firſt fountain and beginning ooze,
Down to the ſea each brook and torrent flows. Prior.

3. The liquor of a tanner's vat.

To Ooze. v. n. [from the noun.] To flow by ſtealth; to run gently; to drain away.

When the contracted limbs were cramp'd, even then
A wat'riſh humour ſwell'd and ooz'd agen. Dryden.

The lily drinks
The latent rill, ſcarce oozing thro' the graſs. Thomſon.

O'ozy. adj. [from ooze.] Miry; muddy; ſlimy.

From his oozy bed,

To Opa'cate. v. a. [opaco, Latin.] To ſhade; to cloud; to darken; to obſcure.

The ſame corpuſcles upon the unſtopping of the glaſs, did opacate that part of the air they moved in. Boyle.

Opa'city. n. ſ. [opacitè, French; opacitas, Latin.] Cloudineſs; want of tranſparency.

Can any thing eſcape eyes in whoſe opticks there is no opacity? Brown.

Had there not been any night, ſhadow or opacity, we ſhould never have had any determinate conceit of darkneſs. Glanville.

How much any body hath of colour, ſo much hath it of opacity, and by ſo much the more unfit is it to tranſmit the ſpecies. Ray.

The leaſt parts of almoſt all bodies, are in ſome meaſure tranſparent; and the opacity of thoſe bodies ariſeth from the multitude of reflexions cauſed in their internal parts. Newton.

Opa'cous. adj. [opacus, Lat.] Dark; obſcure; not tranſparent.

When he perceives that opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal diffuſion through the whole place that it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, and more ſubtile far than they, and conſequently diviſible into leſſer atoms; and having leſſer pores, gives leſs ſcope to our eyes to miſs light. Digby.

Upon the firm opacous globe
Of this round world, whoſe firſt convex divides
The luminous inferior orbs, incloſ'd
From chaos, and th' inroad of darkneſs old,
Satan alighted. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

O'pal. n. ſ. [opalus, Latin.] The opal is a very elegant and ſingular kind of ſtone; it hardly comes within the rank of the pellucid gems, being much more opake, and leſs hard. It is in the pebble ſhape, from the head of a pin to the bigneſs of a walnut. It is naturally bright, and ſhows all its beauty without the help of the lapidary: in colour it reſembles the fineſt mother of pearl; its baſis ſeeming a blueiſh or greyiſh white, but with a property of reflecting all the colours of the rainbow, as turned differently to the light. Hill's Materia Medica.

Thy mind is a very opal. Shakeſpeare's Twelfth Night.

Th' empyreal heav'n, extended wide
In circuit, undetermin'd ſquare or round;
With opal tow'rs, and battlements adorn'd
Of living ſaphir. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

We have this ſtone from Germany, and is the ſame with the opal of the ancients. Woodward on Foſſils.

Opa'que. adj. [opacus, Latin.] Dark; not tranſparent; cloudy.

They
Shot upward ſtill direct, whence no way round
Shadow from body opaque can fall. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Theſe diſappearing fixt ſtars were actually extinguiſhed and turned into more opaque and groſs planet-like bodies. Cheyne.

To ope the gates, and ſo let in our foe. Fairfax.

If a man open a pit and not cover it, and an ox fall therein, the owner of the pit ſhall make it good. Exodus, xxi. 23.

Let us paſs through your land, and none ſhall do you any hurt; howbeit they would not open unto him. 1 Mac. v. 48.

Open thy mouth for the dumb in the cauſe of all ſuch as are appointed to deſtruction. Proverbs, xxxi. 8.

Adam, now ope thine eyes; and firſt behold
Th' effects which thy original crime hath wrought
In ſome to ſpring from thee. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

The draw-bridges at Amſterdam part in the middle, and a veſſel, though under ſail, may paſs them without the help of any one on ſhore; for the maſt-head, or break-water of the ſhip bearing againſt the bridge in the middle, opens it. Brown.

Our fleet Apollo ſends,
Where Tuſcan Tyber rolls with rapid force,
And where Numicus opes his holy ſource. Dryden.

When firſt you ope your doors, and paſſing by,
The ſad ill-omen'd object meets your eye. Dryden.

My old wounds are open'd at this view,
And in my murd'rer's preſence bleed anew. Dryden.

When the matter is made, the ſide muſt be opened to let it out. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

From each ſhe nicely culls with curious toil,
And decks the goddeſs. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

2. To bark. A term of hunting.

If I cry out thus upon no trail, never truſt me when I open again. Shakeſpeare's Merry Wives of Windſor.

The night reſtores our actions done by day;
As hounds in ſleep will open for their prey. Dryden.

Hark! the dog opens, take thy certain aim;
The woodcock flutters. Gay's Rural Sports.

Ope.
O'pen. } adj. [Ope is ſcarcely uſed but by old authors, and by them in the primitive not figurative ſenſe.]

1. Uncloſed; not ſhut.

The gates are ope; now prove good ſeconds;
'Tis for the followers fortune widens them;
Not for the fliers. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

Bodies produce ideas in us, manifeſtly by impulſe, the only way which we can conceive bodies operate in. Locke.

It can operate on the guts and ſtomach, and thereby produce diſtinct ideas. Locke.

A plain convincing reaſon operates on the mind, both of a learned and ignorant hearer as long as they live. Swift.

Where cauſes operate freely, with a liberty of indifference to this or the contrary, the effect will be contingent, and the certain knowledge of it belongs only to God. Watts.

Opera'tion. n. ſ. [operatio, Latin; operation, Fr.]

1. Agency; production of effects; influence.

There are in men operations, natural, rational, ſupernatural, ſome politick, ſome finally eccleſiaſtical. Hooker.

By all the operations of the orbs,
From whom we do exiſt and ceaſe to be,
Here I diſclaim all my paternal care. Shakeſp. King Lear.

All operations by tranſmiſſion of ſpirits, and imagination, work at diſtance, and not at touch. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

Waller's preſence had an extraordinary operation to procure any thing deſired. Clarendon.

The tree whoſe operation brings
Knowledge of good and ill, ſhun to taſte. Milton.

If the operation of theſe ſalts be in convenient glaſſes promoted by warmth, the aſcending ſteams may eaſily be caught and reduced into a penetrant ſpirit. Boyle.

Speculative painting, without the aſſiſtance of manual operation, can never attain to perfection, but ſlothfully languiſhes; for it w not with his tongue that Apelles performed his noble works. Dryd

The pain and ſickneſs cauſed by manna, are the effects of it operation on the ſtomach and guts by the ſize, motion, and figure o its inſenſible parts. Lock

2. Action; effect. This is often confounded with th former ſenſe.

Repentance and renovation conſiſt not in the ſtrife, wiſh, o purpoſe, but in the actual operations of good life. Hammo

Many medicinal drugs of rare operation. Heyly

That falſe fruit
Far other operation firſt diſplay'd,
Carnal deſire inflaming. Milton's Paradiſe L

The offices appointed, and the powers exerciſed in the churc by their inſtitution and operation are holy. Pearſ

In this underſtanding piece of clock-work, his body as well other ſenſeleſs matter has colour, warmth and ſoftneſs. But the qualities are not ſubſiſtent in thoſe bodies, but are operation fancy begotten in ſomething elſe. Bentl

3. [In chirurgery.] The part of the art of healin which depends on the uſe of inſtruments.

4. The motions or employments of an army.

O'perative. adj. [from operate.] Having the pow of acting; having forcible agency; active; vigo rous; efficacious.

To be over curious in ſearching how God's all-piercing a operative ſpirit diſtinguiſhing gave form to the matter of the un verſal, is a ſearch like unto his, who not contented with a kno ford, will preſume to paſs over the greateſt rivers in all parts wh he is ignorant of their depths. Raleig

Many of the nobility endeavoured to make themſelves popu by ſpeaking in parliament againſt thoſe things which were no grateful to his majeſty; and he thought a little diſcountena upon thoſe perſons would ſuppreſs that ſpirit within themſelves, make the poiſon of it leſs operative upon others. Clare

In actions of religion we ſhould be zealous, active, and operative, ſo far as prudence will permit. Taylor.

This circumſtance of the promiſe muſt give life to all the reſt, and make them operative toward the producing of good life. Decay of Piety.

It holds in all operative principles, eſpecially in morality; in which, not to proceed, is certainly to go backward. South.

The will is the concluſion of an operative ſyllogiſm. Norris.

Opera´tor. n. ſ. [operateur, French; from operate.] One that performs any act of the hand; one who produces any effect.

An imaginary operator opening the firſt with a great deal of nicety, upon a curſory view it appeared like the head of another. Addiſon's Spectator.

To adminiſter this doſe, there cannot be fewer than fifty thouſand operators, allowing one operator to every thirty. Swift.

Opero´se. adj. [operoſus, Latin.] Laborious; full of trouble and tediouſneſs.

Such an explication is purely imaginary, and alſo very operoſe; they would be as hard put to it to get rid of this water, when the deluge was to ceaſe, as they were at firſt to procure it. Burnet.

Written language, as it is more operous, ſo it is more digeſted, and is permanent. Holder.

Ophio´phagous. adj. [ὄφις and φάγω.] Serpenteating. Not uſed.

All ſnakes are not of ſuch poiſonous qualities as common opinion preſumeth; as is confirmable from ophiophagous nations, and ſuch as feed upon ſerpents. Brown.

Ophi´tes. n. ſ. A ſtone reſembling a ſerpent.

Ophites has a duſky greeniſh ground, with ſpots of a lighter green, oblong, and uſually near ſquare. Woodward.

Ophtha´lmick. adj. [ophthalmique, French; from ὀφθαλμὸς, Greek.] Relating to the eye.

O´phthalmy. n. ſ. [ophthalmie, Fr. from ὀφθαλμὸς, Greek.] A diſeaſe of the eyes, being an inflammation in the coats, proceeding from arterious blood gotten out of the veſſels and collected into thoſe parts. Dict.

The uſe of cool applications, externally, is moſt eaſy to the eye; but after all, there will ſometimes enſue a troubleſome ophthalmy. Sharp's Surgery.

O´piate. n. ſ. A medicine that cauſes ſleep.

They choſe atheiſm as an opiate, to ſtill thoſe frightning apprehenſions of hell, by inducing a dulneſs and lethargy of mind, rather than to make uſe of that native and ſalutary medicine, a hearty repentance. Bentley.

Thy thoughts and muſic change with ev'ry line;
No ſameneſs of a prattling ſtream is thine,
Which with one uniſon of murmur flows,
Opiate of inattention and repoſe. Harte.

O´piate. adj. Soporiferous; ſomniferous; narcotick; cauſing ſleep.

The particular ingredients of thoſe magical ointments, are opiate and ſoporiferous. For anointing of the forehead and back bone, is uſed for procuring dead ſleeps. Bacon.

All their ſhape
Spangled with eyes, more numerous than thoſe
Of Argus, and more wakeful than to drouze,
Charm'd with Arcadian pipe, the paſt'ral reed
Of Hermes, or his opiate rod. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Lettuce, which has a milky juice with an anodyne or opiate quality reſolvent of the bile, is proper for melancholy. Arbuthnot.

O´pifice. n. ſ. [opificium, Latin.] Workmanſhip; handiwork. Dict.

O´pificer. n. ſ. [opifex, Latin.] One that performs any work; artiſt. A word not received.

Opina´tion. n. ſ. [opinor, Lat.] Opinion; notion. Dict.

Opina´tor. n. ſ. [opinor, Lat.] One who holds an opinion.

Conſider againſt what kind of opinators the reaſon above given is levelled. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To Opi´ne. v. n. [opinor, Lat.] To think; to judge; to be of opinion.

Fear is an ague, that forſakes
And haunts by fits thoſe whom it takes;
And they'll opine they feel the pain
And blows they felt to-day, again. Hudibras.

In matters of mere ſpeculation, it is not material to the welfare of government, or themſelves, whether they opine right or wrong, and whether they be philoſophers or no. South.

But I, who think more highly of our kind,
Opine, that nature, as in duty bound,
Deep hid the ſhining miſchief under ground. Pope.

Opi´niative. adj. [from opinion.]

1. Stiff in a preconceived notion.
2. Imagined; not proved.

It is difficult to find out truth, becauſe it is in ſuch inconſiderable proportions ſcattered in a maſs of opiniative uncertainties; like the ſilver in Hiero's crown of gold. Glanville.

Opinia´tor. n. ſ. [opiniatre, French.] One fond of his own notion; inflexible; adherent to his own opinion.

What will not opiniators and ſelf-believing men diſpute of and make doubt of? Raleigh.

Eſſex left lord Roberts governour; a man of a ſour and ſurly nature, a great opiniator, and one who muſt be overcome before he would believe that he could be ſo. Clarendon.

For all his exact plot, down was he caſt from all his greatneſs, and forced to end his days in a mean condition; as it is pity but all ſuch politick opiniators ſhould. South.

OPINIA´TRE. adj. [French.] Obſtinate; ſtubborn.

Inſtead of an able man, you deſire to have him an inſignificant wrangler, opiniatre in diſcourſe, and priding himſelf in contradicting others. Locke.

Opinia´trety. } Opi´niatry. } n. ſ. [opiniatreté, French.] Obſtinacy; inflexibility; determination of mind; ſtubbornneſs. This word, though it has been tried in different forms, is not yet received, nor is it wanted.

Leſt popular opiniatry ſhould ariſe, we will deliver the chief opinions. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The one ſets the thoughts upon wit and falſe colours, and not upon truth; the other teaches fallacy, wrangling and opiniatry. Locke on Education.

So much as we ourſelves comprehend of truth and reaſon, ſo much we poſſeſs of real and true knowledge. The floating of other men's opinions in our brains, makes us not one jot the more knowing, though they happen to be true: what in them was ſcience, is in us but opiniatrety. Locke.

I can paſs by opiniatry, and the buſy meddling of thoſe who thruſt themſelves into every thing. Woodward's Letters.

I was extremely concerned at his opiniatrety in leaving me: but he ſhall not get rid ſo. Pope.

OPI´NION. n. ſ. [opinion, French; opinio, Latin.]

1. Perſuaſion of the mind, without proof or certain knowledge.

Opinion is a light, vain, crude, and imperfect thing, ſettled in the imagination, but never arriving at the underſtanding, there to obtain the tincture of reaſon. Ben Jonſon.

Opinion is, when the aſſent of the underſtanding is ſo far gained by evidence of probability, that it rather inclines to one perſuaſion than to another, yet not altogether without a mixture of uncertainty or doubting. Hale.

Time wears out the fictions of opinion, and doth by degrees diſcover and unmaſk that fallacy of ungrounded perſuaſions; but confirms the dictates and ſentiments of nature. Wilkins.

Bleſt be the princes who have fought
For pompous names, or wide dominion;
Since by their error we are taught,
That happineſs is but opinion. Prior.

2. Sentiments; judgment; notion.

Where no ſuch ſettled cuſtom hath made it law, there it hath force only according to the ſtrength of reaſon and circumſtances joined with it, or as it ſhews the opinion and judgment of them that made it; but not at all as if it had any commanding power of obedience. Selden.

Can they make it out againſt the common ſenſe and opinion of all mankind, that there is no ſuch thing as a future ſtate of miſery for ſuch as have lived ill here? South.

Charity itſelf commands us, where we know no ill, to think well of all; but friendſhip, that always goes a pitch higher, gives a man a peculiar right and claim to the good opinion of his friend. South.

We may allow this to be his opinion concerning heirs, that where there are divers children the eldeſt ſon has the right to be heir. Locke.

Philoſophers are of opinion, that infinite ſpace is poſſeſſed by God's infinite omnipreſence. Locke.

A ſtory out of Boccalini ſufficiently ſhews us the opinion that judicious author entertained of the criticks. Addiſon.

3. Favourable judgment.

In actions of arms ſmall matters are of great moment, eſpecially when they ſerve to raiſe an opinion of commanders. Hayward.

Howſoever I have no opinion of thoſe things; yet ſo much I conceive to be true, that ſtrong imagination hath more force upon things living, than things merely inanimate. Bacon.

If a woman had no opinion of her own perſon and dreſs, ſhe would never be angry at thoſe who are of the opinion with herſelf. Law.

To Opi´nion. v. a. [from the noun.] To opine; to think. A word out of uſe, and unworthy of revival.

The Stoicks opinioned the ſouls of wiſe men dwell about the moon, and thoſe of fools wandered about the earth: whereas the Epicureans held nothing after death. Brown.

That the ſoul and the angels are devoid of quantity and dimenſion, is generally opinioned. Glanville's Scepſis.

Opi´nionative. adj. [from opinion.] Fond of preconceived notions; ſtubborn.

Striking at the root of pedantry and opinionative aſſurance, would be no hindrance to the world's improvement. Glanville.

One would rather chuſe a reader, without art, than one ill inſtructed with learning, but opinionative and without judgment. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Opi´nionatively. adv. [from opinionative.] Stubbornly.

Opi´nionativeness. n. ſ. [from opinionative.] Obſtinacy.

Opi´nionist. n. ſ. [opinioniſte, French, from opinion.] One fond of his own notions.

Every conceited opinioniſt ſets up an infallible chair in his own brain. Glanville to Albius.

Opi´parous. adj. [opiparus, Lat.] Sumptuous. Dict.

Opitula´tion. n. ſ. [opitulatio, Latin.] An aiding; a helping. Dict.

O´pium. n. ſ. A juice, partly of the reſinous, partly of the gummy kind. It is brought to us in flat cakes or maſſes very heavy and of a denſe texture, not perfectly dry: its colour is a dark browniſh yellow; its ſmell is of a dead faint kind; and its taſte very bitter and very acrid. It is brought from Natolia, Egypt, and the Eaſt-Indies, produced from the white garden poppy; with which the fields of Aſia-Minor are in many places ſown. When the heads grow to maturity, but are yet ſoft, green, and full of juice, inciſions are made in them, and from every one of theſe a few drops flow of a milky juice, which ſoon hardens into a ſolid conſiſtence. The fineſt opium proceeds from the firſt inciſions. What we generally have is the mere crude juice, worked up with water, or honey ſufficient to bring it into form. Externally applied it is emollient, relaxing and diſcutient, and greatly promotes ſuppuration. A moderate doſe of opium taken internally, is generally under a grain, yet cuſtom will make people bear a dram, but in that caſe nature is vitiated. Its firſt effect is the making the patient cheerful; it removes melancholy, and diſſipates the dread of danger; the Turks always take it when they are going to battle: it afterwards quiets the ſpirits, eaſes pain, and diſpoſes to ſleep. After the effect is over, the pain generally returns in a more violent manner; the ſpirits become lower than before, and the pulſe languid. An immoderate doſe of opium brings on drunkenneſs, cheerfulneſs, and loud laughter, at firſt, and, after many terrible ſymptoms, death itſelf. Thoſe who have accuſtomed themſelves to an immoderate uſe of opium, are apt to be faint, idle, and thoughtleſs; they loſe their appetite, and grow old before their time. Hill.

Sleep hath forſook and giv'n me o'er
To death's benumbing opium as my only cure. Milton.

The colour and taſte of opium are, as well as its ſoporifick or anodyne virtues, mere powers depending on its primary qualities, whereby it is fitted to produce different operations on different parts of our bodies. Locke.

O´ple-tree. n. ſ. [opulus, ople, and tree.] A ſort of tree. Ainſworth.

OPOBA´LSAMUM. n. ſ. [Latin.] Balm of Gilead.

OPO´PONAX. n. ſ. [Latin.] A gum reſin in ſmall looſe granules, and ſometimes in large maſſes, of a ſtrong diſagreeable ſmell, and an acrid and extremely bitter taſte; brought to us from the Eaſt, and known to the Greeks; but we are entirely ignorant of the plant which produces this drug. Hill.

O´ppidan. n. ſ. [oppidanus, Lat.] A townſman; an inhabitant of a town.

To Oppi´gnerate. v. a. [oppignero, Latin.] To pledge; to pawn. Not in uſe.

The duke of Guiſe Henry was the greateſt uſurer in France, for that he had turned all his eſtate into obligations; meaning that he had ſold and oppignorated all his patrimony, to give large donatives to other men. Bacon.

Ferdinando merchanded with France, for the reſtoring Rouſſillion and Perpignan, oppignorated to them. Bacon.

To O´PPILATE. v. a. [oppilo, Latin; oppiler, Fr.] To heap up obſtruction.

Oppila´tion. n. ſ. [oppilation, French; from oppilate.] Obſtruction; matter heaped together.

The ingredients preſcribed in their ſubſtance actuate the ſpirits, reclude oppilations, and mundify the blood. Harvey.

O´ppilative. adj. [oppilative, French.] Obſtructive.

Opple´ted. adj. [oppletus, Latin.] Filled; crowded.

Oppo´nent. adj. [opponens, Lat.] Oppoſite; adverſe.

Ere the foundations of this earth were laid,
It was opponent to our ſearch ordain'd,
That joy ſtill ſought, ſhould never be attain'd. Prior.

Oppo´nent. n. ſ. [opponens, Latin.]

1. Antagoniſt; adverſary.
2. One who begins the diſpute by raiſing objections to a tenet, correlative to the defendant or reſpondent.

Inaſmuch as ye go about to deſtroy a thing which is in force, and to draw in that which hath not as yet been received, to impoſe on us that which we think not ourſelves bound unto; that therefore ye are not to claim in any conference other than the plaintiff's or opponents part. Hooker.

How becomingly does Philopolis exerciſe his office, and ſeaſonably commit the opponent with the reſpondent, like a long practiſed moderator. More.

OPPORTU´NE. adj. [opportune, French; opportunus, Latin.] Seaſonable; convenient; fit; timely; well-timed; proper.

There was nothing to be added to this great king's felicity, being at the top of all worldly bliſs, and the perpetual conſtancy of his proſperous ſucceſſes, but an opportune death to withdraw him from any future blow of fortune. Bacon.

Will lift us up in ſpite of fate,
Nearer our ancient ſeat; perhaps in view
Of thoſe bright confines, whence with neighb'ring arms
And opportune excurſion, we may chance
Re-enter heav'n. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Conſider'd every creature, which of all
Moſt opportune might ſerve his wiles; and found
The ſerpent ſubtleſt beaſt of all the field. Milton.

Opportu´nely. adv. [from opportune.] Seaſonably; conveniently; with opportunity either of time or place.

He was reſolved to chuſe a war rather than to have Bretagne carried by France, being ſituate ſo opportunely to annoy England either for coaſt or trade. Bacon's Henry VII.

Againſt theſe there is a proper objection, that they offend uniformity, whereof I am therefore opportunely induced to ſay ſomewhat. Wott.

The experiment does opportunely ſupply the deficiency. Boyle.

Opportu´nity. n. ſ. [opportunité, French; opportunitas, Latin.] Fit time; fit place; time; convenience; ſuitableneſs of circumſtances to any end.

A wiſe man will make more opportunities than he finds. Men's behaviour ſhould be like their apparel, not too ſtraight, but free for exerciſe. Bacon.

Opportunity, like a ſudden guſt,
Hath ſwell'd my calmer thoughts into a tempeſt.
Accurſed opportunity!
That work'ſt our thoughts into deſires, deſires
To reſolutions; thoſe being ripe and quicken'd,
Thou giv'ſt them birth, and bring'ſt them forth to action. Denham.

Tho' their advice be good, their counſel wiſe,
Yet length ſtill loſes opportunities. Denham.

I had an opportunity to ſee the clouds deſcend, and after it was paſt, to aſcend again ſo high as to get over part of the mountain. Brown's Travels.

Neglect no opportunity of doing good, nor check thy deſire of doing it, by a vain fear of what may happen. Atterbury.

All poets have taken an opportunity to give long deſcriptions of the night. Broome.

To OPPO´SE. v. a. [oppoſer, French; oppono, Latin.]

1. To act againſt; to be adverſe; to hinder; to reſiſt.

There's no bottom, none
In my voluptuouſneſs: and my deſire
All continent impediments wou'd o'erbear,
That did oppoſe my will. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

2. To put in oppoſition; to offer as an antagoniſt or rival.

If all men are not naturally equal, I am ſure all ſlaves are; and then I may, without preſumption, oppoſe my ſingle opinion to his. Locke.

3. To place as an obſtacle.

Since he ſtands obdurate,
And that no lawful means can carry me
Out of his envy's reach, I do oppoſe
My patience to his fury. Shakeſpeare's Merchant of Venice.

I thro' the ſeas purſu'd their exil'd race,
Engag'd the heav'ns, oppos'd the ſtormy main;
But billows roar'd and tempeſts rag'd in vain. Dryden.

4. To place in front; to place over againſt.

Her grace ſat down
In a rich chair of ſtate; oppoſing freely
The beauty of her perſon to the people. Shakeſpeare.

To Oppo´se. v. n.

1. To act adverſely.

A ſervant, thrill'd with remorſe,
Oppos'd againſt the act, bending his ſword
To his great maſter. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

He practiſed to diſpatch ſuch of the nobility as were like to oppoſe againſt his miſchievous drift, and in ſuch ſort to encumber and weaken the reſt, that they ſhould be no impediments to him. Hayward.

2. To object in a diſputation; to have the part of raiſing difficulties againſt a tenet ſuppoſed to be right.

Oppo´seless. adj. [from oppoſe.] Irreſiſtible; not to be oppoſed.

I could bear it longer, and not fall
To quarrel with your great oppoſeleſs wills. Shakeſpeare.

Oppo´ser. n. ſ. [from oppoſe.] One that oppoſes; antagoniſt; enemy; rival.

Now the fair goddeſs fortune
Fall deep in love with thee, and her great charms
Miſguide thy oppoſers ſwords: bold gentleman!

Brave wits that have made eſſays worthy of immortality; yet by reaſon of envious and more popular oppoſers, have ſubmitted to fate, and are almoſt loſt in oblivion. Glanville.

I do not ſee how the miniſters could have continued in their ſtations, if their oppoſers had agreed about the methods by which they ſhould be ruined. Swift.

A hardy modern chief,
A bold oppoſer of divine belief. Blackmore.

O´PPOSITE. adj. [oppoſite, French; oppoſitus, Latin.]

1. Placed in front; facing each other.

To th' other five,
Their planetary motions and aſpects,

In ſextile, ſquare, trine and oppoſite,
Of noxious efficacy. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

2. Adverſe; repugnant.

Nothing of a foreign nature, like the trifling novels, by which the reader is miſled into another ſort of pleaſure, oppoſite to that which is deſigned in an epick poem. Dryden.

This is a proſpect very uneaſy to the luſts and paſſions, and oppoſite to the ſtrongeſt deſires of fleſh and blood. Rogers.

3. Contrary.

In this fallen ſtate of man religion begins with repentance and converſion, the two oppoſite terms of which are God and ſin. Tillotſon.

Particles of ſpeech have divers, and ſometimes almoſt oppoſite ſignifications. Locke.

O'PPOSITE. n. ſ. Adverſary; opponent; antagoniſt; enemy.

To the beſt and wiſeſt, while they live, the world is continually a froward oppoſite, a curious obſerver of their defects and imperfections; their virtues it afterwards as much admireth. Hooker.

He is the moſt ſkilful, bloody, and fatal oppoſite that you could have found in Illyria. Shakeſpeare's Twelfth Night.

The knight whom fate or happy chance
Shall grace his arms ſo far in equal fight,
From out the bars to force his oppoſite,
The prize of valour and of love ſhall gain. Dryden.

O'PPOSITELY. adv. [from oppoſite.]

1. In ſuch a ſituation as to face each other.

The leſſer pair are joined edge to edge, but not oppoſitely with their points downward, but upward. Grew.

2. Adverſely.

I oft have ſeen, when corn was ripe to mow,
And now in dry, and brittle ſtraw did grow,
Winds from all quarters oppoſitely blow. May's Virgil.

O'PPOSITENESS. n. ſ. [from oppoſite.] The ſtate of being oppoſite.

OPPOSI'TION. n. ſ. [oppoſition, Fr. oppoſitio, Latin.]

1. Situation ſo as to front ſomething oppoſed; ſtanding over againſt.

2. Hoſtile reſiſtance.

He
Cry'd Oh! and mounted; found no oppoſition
From what he look'd for ſhould oppoſe. Shakeſpeare.

Virtue which breaks thro' oppoſition,
And all temptation can remove,
Moſt ſhines, and moſt is acceptable above. Milton.

He conſiders Lauſus reſcuing his father at the hazard of his own life, as an image of himſelf when he took Anchiſes on his ſhoulders, and bore him ſafe through the rage of the fire and the oppoſition of his enemies. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

3. Contrariety of affection.

They who never tried the experiment of a holy life, meaſure the laws of God not by their intrinſical goodneſs, but by the reluctancy and oppoſition which they find in their own hearts. Tillotſon.

4. Contrariety of intereſt; contrariety of meaſures.

When the church is taken for the perſons making profeſſion of the chriſtian faith, the catholick is often added in oppoſition to hereticks and ſchiſmaticks. Pearſon.

5. Contrariety of meaning; diverſity of meaning.

The parts of every true oppoſition do always both concern the ſame ſubject, and have reference to the ſame thing, ſith otherwiſe they are but in ſhew oppoſite, not in truth. Hooker.

The uſe of language and cuſtom of ſpeech, in all authors I have met with, has gone upon this rule, or maxim, that excluſive terms are always to be underſtood in oppoſition only to what they are oppoſed to, and not in oppoſition to what they are not oppoſed to. Waterland.

6. Inconſiſtency.

Reaſon can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence to embrace what is leſs evident, nor allow it to entertain probability in oppoſition to knowledge and certainty. Locke.

To O'PPRESS. v. a. [oppreſſus, Latin.]

1. To cruſh by hardſhip or unreaſonable ſeverity.

Iſrael and Judah were oppreſſed together, and all that took them captives held them faſt, they refuſed to let them go. Jeremiah.

Alas! a mortal moſt oppreſt of thoſe
Whom fate has loaded with a weight of woes. Pope.

2. To overpower; to ſubdue.

We're not ourſelves,
When nature, being oppreſt, commands the mind
To ſuffer with the body. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

In blazing height of noon,
The ſun oppreſs'd, is plunged in thickeſt gloom. Thomſon.

OPPRE'SSION. n. ſ. [oppreſſion, French, from oppreſs.]

1. The act of oppreſſing; cruelty; ſeverity.

If thou ſeeſt the oppreſſions of the poor, marvel not at the matter, for he that is higher than the higheſt regardeth. Eccleſ.

2. The ſtate of being oppreſſed; miſery.

Famine is in thy cheeks;
Need and oppreſſion ſtare within thine eyes,
Contempt and beggary hang upon thy back. Shakeſpeare.

Cæſar himſelf has work, and our oppreſſion
Exceeds what we expected. Shakeſpeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

3. Hardſhip; calamity.

We are all ſubject to the ſame accidents; and when we ſee any under particular oppreſſion, we ſhould look upon it as the common lot of human nature. Addiſon.

4. Dulneſs of ſpirits; laſſitude of body.

Drouſineſs, oppreſſion, heavineſs, and laſſitude, are ſigns of a too plentiful meal. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

OPPRE'SSIVE. adj. [from oppreſs.]

1. Cruel; inhuman; unjuſtly exactious or ſevere.

2. Heavy; overwhelming.

Alicia, reach thy friendly arm,
And help me to ſupport that feeble frame,
That nodding totters with oppreſſive woe,
And ſinks beneath its load. Rowe's Jane Shore.

To eaſe the ſoul of one oppreſſive weight,
This quits an empire, that embroils a ſtate. Pope.

OPPRE'SSOR. n. ſ. [oppreſſeur, French, from oppreſs.] One who haraſſes others with unreaſonable or unjuſt ſeverity.

I from oppreſſors did the poor defend,
The fatherleſs, and ſuch as had no friend. Sandys.

The cries of orphans, and th' oppreſſor's rage,

ORATO'RICAL. adj. [from oratour.] Rhetorical; befitting an oratour.

Where he ſpeaks in an oratorical, affecting, or perſuaſive way, let this be explained by other places where he treats of the ſame theme in a doctrinal way. Watts.

O'RATOUR. n. ſ. [orateur, French; orator, Latin.]

1. A publick ſpeaker; a man of eloquence.

Poor queen and ſon! your labour is but loſt;
For Warwick is a ſubtle orator. Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.

As when of old ſome orator renown'd,
In Athens or free Rome, where eloquence
Flouriſh'd, ſince mute! to ſome great cauſe addreſs'd,
Stood in himſelf collected; while each part,
Motion, each act, won audience. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

It would be altogether vain and improper in matters belonging to an orator to pretend to ſtrict demonſtration. Wilkins.

The conſtant deſign of both theſe orators in all their ſpeeches, was to drive ſome one particular point. Swift.

I have liſtened to an orator of this ſpecies, without being able to underſtand one ſingle ſentence. Swift.

Both orators ſo much renown'd,
In their own depths of eloquence were drown'd. Dryden.

When a world of men
Could not prevail with all their oratory,
Yet hath a woman's kindneſs over-rul'd. Shakeſpeare.

When my oratory grew tow'rd end,
I bid them that did love their country's good,
Cry, God ſave Richard! Shakeſpeare's Richard III.

Sighs now breath'd
Unutterable, which the ſpirit of pray'r
Inſpir'd, and wing'd for heav'n with ſpeedier flight
Than loudeſt oratory. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

By this kind of oratory, and profeſſing to decline their own inclinations and wiſhes, purely for peace and unity, they prevailed over thoſe who were ſtill ſurpriſed. Clarendon.

Hammond's ſubjects were ſuch as had greateſt influence on practice, which he preſt with moſt affectionate tenderneſs, making tears part of his oratory. Fell.

The former, who had to deal with a people of much more politeneſs, learning, and wit, laid the greateſt weight of his oratory upon the ſtrength of his arguments. Swift.

Come harmleſs characters, that no one hit,
Come Henley's oratory, Oſborn's wit. Pope.

2. Exerciſe of eloquence.

The Romans had ſeized upon the fleet of the Antiates, among which there were ſix armed with roſtra, with which the conſul Menenius adorned the public place of oratory. Arbuthnot.

3. [Oratoire, French.]

Oratory ſignifies a private place, which is deputed and allotted for prayer alone, and not for the general celebration of divine ſervice. Ayliffe's Parergon.

They began to erect to themſelves oratories not in any ſumptuous or ſtately manner, which neither was poſſible by reaſon of the poor eſtate of the church, and had been perilous in regard of the world's envy towards them. Hooker.

Do not omit thy prayers for want of a good oratory or place to pray in; nor thy duty for want of temporal encouragements. Taylor.

ORB. n. ſ. [orbe, French; orbis, Latin.]

14. [In architecture.]

A ſyſtem of the ſeveral members, ornaments, and proportions of columns and pilaſters; or it is a regular arrangement of the projecting parts of a building, eſpecially thoſe of a column; ſo as to form one beautiful whole: or order is a certain rule for the proportions of columns, and for the figures which ſome of the parts ought to have on the account of the proportions that are given them. There are five orders of columns; three of which are Greek, viz. the doric, ionic, and corinthian; and two Italian, viz. the tuſcan and compoſite. The whole is compoſed of two parts at leaſt, the column and the entablature, and of four parts at the moſt; where there is a pedeſtal under the columns, and one acroter or little pedeſtal on the top of the entablature. The column has three parts: the baſe, the ſhaft, and the capital; which parts are all different in the ſeveral orders.

In the tuſcan order, any height being given, divide it into ten parts and three quarters, called diameters, by diameters is meant the thickneſs of the ſhaft at the bottom, the pedeſtal having two; the column with baſe and capital, ſeven; and the entablature one and three quarters.

In the doric order, the whole height being given, is divided into twelve diameters or parts, and one third; the pedeſtal having two and one third, the column eight, and the entablature two.

In the ionic order, the whole height is divided into thirteen diameters and a half, the pedeſtal having two and two thirds, the column nine, and the entablature one and four fifths.

In the corinthian order, the whole height is divided into fourteen diameters and a half, the pedeſtal having three, the column nine and a half, and the entablature two.

In the compoſite order, the whole height is divided into fifteen diameters and one third; the pedeſtal having three and one third, the column ten, and the entablature two.

In a colonnade or range of pillars, the intercolumniation or ſpace between columns in the tuſcan order, is four diameters. In the doric order, two and three quarters; in the ionic order, two and a quarter; in the corinthian order, two; and in the compoſite order, one and a half. Builder's Dict.

Poor orphan in the wide world ſcattered,
As budding branch rent from the native tree,
And thrown forth until it be withered:
Such is the ſtate of man. Spenſer.
Who can be bound by any ſolemn vow
To reave the orphan of his patrimony,
To wring the widow from her cuſtom'd right,
And have no other reaſon for his wrong,
But that he was bound by a ſolemn oath? Shakeſpeare.
Sad widows, by thee rifled, weep in vain,
And ruin'd orphans of thy rapes complain. Sandys.
The ſea with ſpoils his angry bullets ſtrow,
Widows and orphans making as they go. Waller.
Pity, with a parent's mind,
This helpleſs orphan whom thou leav'ſt behind. Dryden.

Embathed balm and cheerful galingale. Spenſer.

O´RRERY. n. ſ. An inſtrument which by many complicated movements repreſents the revolutions of the heavenly bodies. It was firſt made by Mr. Rowley, a mathematician born at Litchfield, and ſo named from his patron the earl of Orrery: by one or other of this family almoſt every art has been encouraged or improved.

O´RRIS. n. ſ. [oris, Lat.] A plant and flower. Miller.

The nature of the orris root is almoſt ſingular; for roots that are in any degree ſweet, it is but the ſame ſweetneſs with the wood or leaf; but the orris is not ſweet in the leaf; neither is the flower any thing ſo ſweet as the root. Bacon.

O´RRIS. n. ſ. [old French.] A ſort of gold or ſilver lace.

ORTS. n. ſ. ſeldom with a ſingular. [This word is derived by Skinner from ort, German, the fourth part of any thing; by Mr. Lye more reaſonably from orda, Iriſh, a fragment. In Anglo Saxon, ord ſignifies the beginning; whence in ſome provinces odds and ends, for ords and ends, ſignify remnants, ſcattered pieces, refuſe; from ord thus uſed probably came ort.] Refuſe; things left or thrown away. Obſolete.

He muſt be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth;
A barren-ſpirited fellow, one that feeds
On abject orts and imitations. Shakeſpeare's Julius Cæſar.
The fractions of her faith, orts of her love,
The fragments, ſcraps, the bits, and greaſy reliques
Of her o'er-eaten faith, are bound to Diomede. Shakeſpeare.
Much good do't you then;
Brave pluſh and velvet men
Can feed on orts, and ſafe in your ſtage-cloths,
Dare quit, upon your oaths,
The ſtagers, and the ſtage-wrights too. Ben Jonſon.

O´RTHODOX.
ORTHODO´XAL. } adj. [ὀρθος and δοκέω; orthodox, French.] Sound in opinion and doctrine; not heretical. Orthodoxal is not uſed.

Be you perſuaded and ſettled in the true proteſtant religion profeſſed by the church of England, which is as ſound and orthodox in the doctrine thereof, as any Chriſtian church in the world. Bacon.

An uniform profeſſion of one and the ſame orthodoxal verity, which was once given to the ſaints in the holy Apoſtles days. White.

Eternal bliſs is not immediately ſuperſtructed on the moſt orthodox beliefs; but as our Saviour ſaith, If ye know theſe things, happy are ye if ye do them; the doing muſt be firſt ſuperſtructed on the knowing or believing, before any happineſs can be built on it. Hammond.

Origen and the two Clemens's, their works were originally orthodox, but had been afterwards corrupted, and interpolated by hereticks in ſome parts of them. Waterland.

O´RTHODOXLY. adv. [from orthodox.] With ſoundneſs of opinion.

The doctrine of the church of England, expreſſed in the thirty-nine articles, is ſo ſoundly and ſo orthodoxly ſettled, as cannot be queſtioned without extreme danger to the honour of our religion. Bacon.

O´RTHODOXY. n. ſ. [ὀρθοδοξία; orthodoxie, Fr. from orthodox.] Soundneſs in opinion and doctrine.

Baſil himſelf bears full and clear teſtimony to Gregory's orthodoxy. Waterland.

I do not attempt explaining the myſteries of the Chriſtian religion; ſince Providence intended there ſhould be myſteries, it cannot be agreeable to piety, orthodoxy, or good ſenſe, to go about it. Swift.

O´RTHODROMICKS. n. ſ. [from ὀρθος and δρόμος.] The art of ſailing in the arc of ſome great circle, which is the ſhorteſt or ſtraighteſt diſtance between any two points on the ſurface of the globe. Harris.

The oſtentation of our love. Shakeſpeare.

2. Ambitious diſplay; boaſt; vain ſhow. This is the uſual ſenſe.

If all theſe ſecret ſprings of detraction fail, yet a vain oſtentation of wit ſets a man on attacking an eſtabliſhed name, and ſacrificing it to the mirth and laughter of thoſe about him. Addiſon's Spectator.

He knew that good and bountiful minds were ſometimes inclined to oſtentation, and ready to cover it with pretence of inciting others by their example, and therefore checks this vanity: Take heed, ſays he, that you do not your alms before men, to be ſeen. Atterbury.

With all her luſtre, now, her lover warms;
Then out of oſtentation, hides her charms. Young.

The great end of the art is to ſtrike the imagination. The painter is therefore to make no oſtentation of the means by which this is done; the ſpectator is only to feel the reſult in his boſom. Reynolds.

3. A ſhow; a ſpectacle. Not in uſe.

The king would have me preſent the princeſs with ſome delightful oſtentation, ſhow, pageant, antick, or firework. Shakeſpeare.

OSTENTA´TIOUS. adj. [oſtento, Latin.] Boaſtful; vain; fond of ſhow; fond to expoſe to view.

Your modeſty is ſo far from being oſtentatious of the good you do, that it bluſhes even to have it known; and therefore I muſt leave you to the ſatisfaction of your own conſcience, which, though a ſilent panegyrick, is yet the beſt. Dryden.

They let Ulyſſes into his diſpoſition, and he ſeems to be ignorant, credulous, and oſtentatious. Broome on the Odyſſey.

Ostenta´tiously. adv. [from oſtentatious.] Vainly; boaſtfully.

Ostenta´tiousness. n. ſ. [from oſtentatious.] Vanity; boaſtfulneſs.

Ostenta´tour. n. ſ. [oſtentateur, French; oſtento, Latin.] A boaſter; a vain ſetter to ſhow.

Oste´ocolla. n. ſ. [ὀστέον and κολλάω; oſteocolle, Fr.] Oſteocolla is frequent in Germany, and has long been famous for bringing on a callus in fractured bones. Hill's Mat. Med.

Oſteocolla is a ſpar, generally coarſe, concreted with earthy or ſtony matter, precipitated by water, and incruſted upon ſticks, ſtones, and other like bodies. Woodward.

Osteo´cope. n. ſ. [ὀστέον and κόπτω; oſteocope, French.] Pains in the bones, or rather in the nerves and membranes that encompaſs them. Dict.

Osteo´logy. n. ſ. [ὀστέον and λέγω; oſteologie, French.] A deſcription of the bones.

Richard Farloe, well known for his acuteneſs in diſſection of dead bodies, and his great ſkill in oſteology, has now laid by that practice. Tatler.

Osti´ary. n. ſ. [oſtium, Latin.] The opening at which a river diſembogues itſelf.

It is received, that the Nilus hath ſeven oſtiaries, that is, by ſeven channels diſburtheneth itſelf unto the ſea. Brown.

O´stler. n. ſ. [hoſtelier, French.] The man who takes care of horſes at an inn.

The ſmith, the oſtler, and the boot-catcher, ought to partake. Swift's Directions to the Groom.

O´stlery. n. ſ. [hoſtelerie, French.] The place belonging to the oſtler.

O´stracism. n. ſ. [ὀστρακισμὸς; oſtraciſme, Fr.] A manner of paſſing ſentence, in which the note of acquittal or condemnation was marked upon a ſhell which the voter threw into a veſſel. Baniſhment; publick cenſure.

Virtue in courtiers hearts
Suffers an oſtraciſm, and departs;
Profit, eaſe, fitneſs, plenty, bid it go,
But whither, only knowing you, I know. Donne.

Publick envy is as an oſtraciſm, that eclipſeth men when they grow too great; and therefore it is a bridle to keep them within bounds. Bacon's Eſſays.

Hyperbolus by ſuffering did traduce
The oſtraciſm, and ſham'd it out of uſe. Cleaveland.

This man, upon a ſlight and falſe accuſation of favouring arbitrary power, was baniſhed by oſtraciſm; which in Engliſh would ſignify, that they voted he ſhould be removed from their preſence and council for ever. Swift.

O´stracites. n. ſ. Oſtracites expreſſes the common oyſter in its foſſil ſtate. Hill's Materia Medica.

O´strich. n. ſ. [autruche, French; ſtruthio, Latin.] Oſtrich is ranged among birds. It is very large, its wings very ſhort, and the neck about four or five ſpans. The feathers of its wings are in great eſteem, and are uſed as an ornament for hats, beds, canopies: they are ſtained of ſeveral colours, and made into pretty tufts. They are hunted by way of courſe, for they never fly; but uſe their wings to aſſiſt them in running more ſwiftly. The oſtrich ſwallows bits of iron or braſs, in the ſame manner as other birds will ſwallow ſmall ſtones or gravel, to aſſiſt in digeſting or comminuting their food. It lays its eggs upon the ground, hides them under the ſand, and the ſun hatches them. Calmet.

I'll make thee eat iron like an oſtrich, and ſwallow my ſword like a great pin, ere thou and I part. Shakeſpeare.

Gaveſt thou the goodly wings unto the peacock? or wings and feathers unto the oſtrich? Job, xxxix. 13.

The Scots knights errant fight, and fight to eat,
Their oſtrich ſtomachs make their ſwords their meat. Cleav.

Modern oſtriches are dwindled to meer larks, in compariſon with thoſe of the ancients. Arbuthnot.

Otacou´stick. n. ſ. [ὦτα and ἀκούω; otacouſtique, Fr.] An inſtrument to facilitate hearing.

In a hare, which is very quick of hearing, it is ſupplied with a bony tube; which, as a natural otacouſtick, is ſo directed backward, as to receive the ſmalleſt and moſt diſtant ſound that comes behind her. Grew's Coſmol.

O´ther. pron. [oðeɲ, Saxon; autre, French.]

1. Not the ſame; not this; different. In this ſenſe it ſeems an adjective, yet in the plural, when the ſubſtantive is ſuppreſſed, it has, contrarily to the nature of adjectives, a plural termination: as, of laſt week three days were fair, the others rainy.

Of good actions ſome are better than other ſome. Hooker.

Will it not be receiv'd
That they have don't?—
—Who dares receive it other? Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

The diſmayed matrons and maidens, ſome in their houſes, other ſome in the churches, with floods of tears and lamentable cries, poured forth their prayers to the Almighty, craving his help in that their hard diſtreſs. Knolles.

He that will not give juſt occaſion to think, that all government in the world is the product only of force and violence, and that men live together by no other rules but that of beaſts, where the ſtrongeſt carries; and ſo lay a foundation for perpetual diſorder and miſchief, tumult, ſedition, and rebellion; things that the followers of that hypotheſis ſo loudly cry out againſt, muſt of neceſſity find out another ſtate of government. Locke.

No leaſes ſhall ever be made other than leaſes for years not exceeding thirty-one, in poſſeſſion, and not in reverſion or remainder. Swift.

2. Not I, or he, but ſome one elſe: in this ſenſe it is a ſubſtantive, and has a genitive and plural.

Were I king,
I ſhould cut off the nobles for their lands;
Deſire his jewels and this other's houſe. Shakeſpeare.

Phyſicians are ſome of them ſo conformable to the humour of the patient, as they preſs not the cure of the diſeaſe; and ſome other are ſo regular in proceeding according to art, as they reſpect not the condition of the patient. Bacon.

The confuſion ariſes, when the one will put their ſickle into the other's harveſt. Leſley.

Never allow yourſelves to be idle, whilſt others are in want of any thing that your hands can make for them. Law.

The king had all he crav'd, or could compel,
And all was done—let others judge how well. Daniel.

3. Not the one, not this, but the contrary.

There is that controling worth in goodneſs, that the will cannot but like and deſire it; and on the other ſide, that odious deformity in vice, that it never offers itſelf to the affections of mankind, but under the diſguiſe of the other. South.

4. Correlative to each.

In lowlineſs of mind let each eſteem other better than themſelves. Philippians, ii. 3.

Scotland and thou did each in other live,
Nor would'ſt thou her, nor could ſhe thee ſurvive. Dryden.

5. Something beſides.

The learning of Latin being nothing but the learning of words, join as much other real knowledge with it as you can. Locke.

6. The next.

Thy air,
Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the firſt;
A third is like the former. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

7. The third paſt.

Bind my hair up: as 'twas yeſterday?
No, nor the t' other day. Ben Jonſon.

8. It is ſometimes put elliptically for other thing; ſomething different.

I can expect no other from thoſe that judge by ſingle fights and raſh meaſures, than to be thought fond or inſolent. Glanville.

O´thergates. adv. [other and gate, for way.] In another manner.

If ſir Toby had not been in drink, he would have tickled you othergates than he did. Shakeſpeare's Twelfth Night.

O´therguise. adv. [other and guiſe. This is often pronounced and ſometimes written otherguts.] Of another kind.

O´therwhere. adv. [other and where.] In other places.

As Jews they had acceſs to the temple and ſynagogues, but as Chriſtians they were of neceſſity forced otherwhere to aſſemble themſelves. Hooker.

His godlike acts, and his temptations fierce,
And former ſufferings, otherwhere are found. Milton.

O´therwhile. adv. [other and while.] At other times.

O´therwise. adv. [other and wiſe.]

1. In a different manner.

They only plead, that whatſoever God revealeth, as neceſſary for all Chriſtian men to do and believe, the ſame we ought to embrace, whether we have received it by writing or otherwiſe, which no man denieth. Hooker.

The whole church hath not tied the parts unto one and the ſame thing, they being therein left each to their own choice, may either do as others do, or elſe otherwiſe, without any breach of duty at all. Hooker.

The evidences for ſuch things are not ſo infallible, but that there is a poſſibility that the things may be otherwiſe. Wilkins.

In theſe good things, what all others ſhould practiſe, we ſhould ſcarce know to practiſe otherwiſe. Sprat.

Thy father was a worthy prince,
And merited, alas! a better fate;
But heaven thought otherwiſe. Addiſon's Cato.

2. By other cauſes.

Sir John Norris failed in the attempts of Liſborn, and returned with the loſs, by ſickneſs and otherwiſe, of eight thouſand men. Raleigh.

3. In other reſpects.

It is ſaid truly, that the beſt men otherwiſe, are not always the beſt in regard of ſociety. Hooker.

Men ſeldom conſider God any otherwiſe than in relation to themſelves, and therefore want ſome extraordinary benefits to excite their attention, and engage their love. Rogers.

O'TTER. n. ſ. [oꞇeꞃ, Saxon; lutra, Lat.] An amphibious animal that preys upon fiſh.

The toes of the otter's hinder feet, for the better ſwimming, are joined together with a membrane, as in the bevir; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canin; and in his tail, which is felin, or a long taper: ſo that he may not be unfitly called putoreus aquaticus, or the water polecat. He makes himſelf burrows on the water-ſide, as a bevir; is ſometimes tamed, and taught, by nimbly ſurrounding the fiſhes, to drive them into the net. Grew.

At the lower end of the hall is a large otter's ſkin ſtuffed with hay. Addiſon's Spectator.

Would you preſerve a num'rous finny race?
Let your fierce dogs the rav'nous otter chaſe;
Th' amphibious monſter ranges all the ſhores,
Darts thro' the waves, and ev'ry haunt explores. Gay.

O'VAL. adj. [ovale, French; ovum, an egg.] Oblong; reſembling the longitudinal ſection of an egg.

The mouth is low and narrow, but, after having entered pretty far in the grotto, opens itſelf on both ſides in an oval figure of an hundred yards. Addiſon on Italy.

Mercurius, neareſt to the central ſun,
Does in an oval orbit, circling run;
But rarely is the object of our ſight,
In ſolar glory ſunk. Blackmore.

O'VAL. n. ſ.

A triangle is that which has three angles, or an oval is that which has the ſhape of an egg. Watts's Logick.

OVA'RIOUS. adj. [from ovum.] Conſiſting of eggs.

He to the rocks
Dire clinging gathers his ovarious food. Thomſon.

O'VARY. n. ſ. [ovaire, French; ovarium, Lat.] The part of the body in which impregnation is performed.

The ovary or part where the white involveth it, is in the ſecond region of the matrix, which is ſomewhat long and inverted. Brown.

OVA'TION. n. ſ. [ovation, French; ovatio, Lat.] A leſſer triumph among the Romans allowed to thoſe commanders who had won a victory without much bloodſhed, or defeated ſome leſs formidable enemy. Dict.

O'UBAT. } n. ſ. [eruca piloſa, Latin.] A ſort of caterpillar; an inſect. Dict.
O'UBUST. }

OUCH. n. ſ. An ornament of gold or jewels.

Ouches or ſpangs, as they are of no great coſt, ſo they are of moſt glory. Bacon.

OUCH of a boar. The blow given by a boar's tuſk. Ainſworth.

O'VEN. n. ſ. [oꝼen, Saxon.] An arched cavity heated with fire to bake bread.

He loudly bray'd, that like was never heard,
And from his wide devouring oven ſent
A flake of fire, that flaſhing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd. Spenſer.

Here's yet in the world hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cake, the heat of the oven, and the baking. Shakeſpeare.

Bats have been found in ovens and other hollow cloſe places, matted one upon another; and therefore it is likely that they ſleep in the winter, and eat nothing. Bacon.

O'VER hath a double ſignification in the names of places, according to the different ſituations of them. If the place be upon or near a river, it comes from the Saxon oꝼꞃe, a brink or bank: but if there is in the neighbourhood another of the ſame name, diſtinguiſhed by the addition of nether, then over is from the Gothick ufar, above. Gibſon's Camden.

O'VER. prep. [ufar, Gothick; oꝼꞃe, Saxon.]

1. Above, with reſpect to excellence or dignity.

How happy ſome, o'er other ſome can be!
Thro' Athens I am thought as fair as ſhe. Shakeſpeare.

Young Pallas ſhone conſpicuous o'er the reſt;
Gilded his arms, embroider'd was his veſt. Dryden.

High, over all, was your great conduct ſhown,
You ſought our ſafety, but forgot your own. Dryden.

The commentary which attends this poem, will have one advantage over moſt commentaries, that it is not made upon conjectures. Pope.

It will afford field enough for a divine to enlarge on, by ſhewing the advantages which the Chriſtian world has over the Heathen. Swift.

2. Above, with regard to rule or authority. Oppoſed to under.

The church has over her biſhops, able to ſilence the factious, no leſs by their preaching than by their authority. South.

Captain, yourſelf are the fitteſt to live and reign not over, but next and immediately under the people. Dryden.

3. Above in place. Oppoſed to below.

He was more than over ſhoes in love. Shakeſpeare.

The ſtreet ſhould ſee as ſhe walkt over head. Shakeſpeare.

Thrice happy is that humble pair,
Beneath the level of all care,
Over whoſe heads thoſe arrows fly,
Of ſad diſtruſt and jealouſy. Waller.

4. Acroſs; from ſide to ſide: as, he leaped over the brook.

Come o'er the brook Beſſy to me,
She dares not come over to thee. Shakeſpeare.

The firſt came out red all over, like an hairy garment. Geneſis.

7. Paſt. This is rather the ſenſe of an adjective.

Soliman pauſing upon the matter, the heat of his fury being ſomething over, ſuffered himſelf to be intreated. Knolles.

Meditate upon the effects of anger; and the beſt time to do this, is to look back upon anger when the fit is over. Bacon.

What the garden choiceſt bears
To ſit and taſte, till this meridian heat
Be over, and the ſun more cool decline. Milton.

The act of ſtealing was ſoon over, and cannot be undone, and for it the ſinner is only anſwerable to God or his vicegerent. Taylor.

He will, as ſoon as his firſt ſurprize is over, begin to wonder how ſuch a favour came to be beſtowed on him. Atterbury.

There youths and nymphs in conſort gay,
Shall hail the riſing, cloſe the parting day;
With me, alas! with me thoſe joys are o'er,
For me the vernal garlands bloom no more. Pope.

8. Throughout; completely.

Well,
Have you read o'er the letters I ſent you? Shakeſpeare.

Let them argue over all the topicks of divine goodneſs and human weakneſs, yet how trifling muſt be their plea! South's Sermons.

In the ſame verſe, the ſame rules o'er and o'er. Dryden.

Longing they look, and gaping at the ſight,
Devour her o'er and o'er with vaſt delight. Dryden.

Thou, my Hector, art thyſelf alone,
My parents, brothers, and my lord in one:
O kill not all my kindred o'er again,
Nor tempt the dangers of the duſty plain;
But in this tow'r, for our defence, remain. Dryden.

When children forget, or do an action aukwardly, make them do it over and over again, till they are perfect. Locke.

If this miracle of Chriſt's riſing from the dead, be not ſufficient to convince a reſolved libertine, neither would the riſing of one now from the dead be ſufficient for that purpoſe; ſince it would only be the doing that over again which hath been done already. Atterbury.

The moſt learned will never find occaſion to act over again what is fabled of Alexander the Great, that when he had conquered the eaſtern world, he wept for want of more worlds to conquer. Watts.

He cramm'd his pockets with the precious ſtore,
And ev'ry night review'd it o'er and o'er. Harte.

10. Extraordinary; in a great degree.

The word ſymbol ſhould not ſeem to be over difficult. Baker.

11. OVER and above. Beſides; beyond what was firſt ſuppoſed, or immediately intended.

Moſes took the redemption money of them that were over and above. Numbers, iii. 49.

He gathered a great maſs of treaſure, and gained over and above the good will and eſteem of all people wherever he came. L'Eſtrange.

12. OVER againſt. Oppoſite; regarding in front.

Deviliſh Macbeth
By many of theſe trains hath ſought to win me
Into his pow'r: and modeſt wiſdom plucks me
From over-credulous haſte. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

St. Hierom reporteth, that he ſaw a ſatyr; but the truth hereof I will not raſhly impugn, or over-boldly affirm. Peacham.

Theſe over-buſy ſpirits, whoſe labour is their only reward, hunt a ſhadow and chaſe the wind. Decay of Piety.

If the ferment of the breaſt be vigorous, an over-fermentation in the part produceth a phlegmon. Wiſeman.

A gangrene doth ariſe in phlegmons, through the unſeaſonable application of over-cold medicaments. Wiſeman.

Poets, like lovers, ſhould be bold and dare,
They ſpoil their buſineſs with an over-care:
And he who ſervilely creeps after ſenſe,
Is ſafe, but ne'er will reach an excellence. Dryden.

Wretched man o'erfeeds
His cramm'd deſires, with more than nature needs. Dryden.

Bending o'er the cup, the tears ſhe ſhed,
Seem'd by the poſture to diſcharge her head,
O'er-fill'd before. Dryden's Boccace.

As they are likely to over-flouriſh their own caſe, their flattery is hardeſt to be diſcovered: for who would imagine himſelf guilty of putting tricks upon himſelf? Collier.

He has afforded us only the twilight of probability; ſuitable to that ſtate of mediocrity he has placed us in here; wherein to check our over-confidence and preſumption, we might, by every day's experience, be made ſenſible of our ſhortſightedneſs. Locke.

This part of grammar has been much neglected, as ſome others over-diligently cultivated. It is eaſy for men to write one after another of caſes and genders. Locke.

It is an ill way of eſtabliſhing this truth, and ſilencing atheiſts, to take ſome men's having that idea of God in their minds, for the only proof of a deity; and out of an over-fondneſs of that darling invention, caſhier all other arguments. Locke.

A grown perſon ſurfeiting with honey, no ſooner hears the name of it, but his fancy immediately carries ſickneſs and qualms to his ſtomach: had this happened to him by an over-doſe of honey, when a child, all the ſame effects would have followed, but the cauſe would have been miſtaken, and the antipathy counted natural. Locke.

Take care you over-burn not the turf; it is only to be burnt ſo as may make it break. Mortimer.

Don't over-fatigue the ſpirits, leſt the mind be ſeized with a laſſitude, and thereby nauſeate and grow tired of a particular ſubject. Watts.

The memory of the learner ſhould not be too much crowded with a tumultuous heap of ideas; one idea effaces another. An over-greedy graſp does not retain the largeſt handful. Watts.

To O'VER-ABOUND. v. n. [over and abound.] To abound more than enough.

Both imbibe
Fitting congenial juice, ſo rich the ſoil,
So much does fructuous moiſture o'er-abound. Philips.

The learned, never over-abounding in tranſitory coin, ſhould not be diſcontented. Pope's Letters.

To O'VER-ACT. v. a. [over and act.] To act more than enough.

You over-act, when you ſhould underdo:
A little call yourſelf again, and think. Ben Jonſon.

Princes courts may over-act their reverence, and make themſelves laughed at for their fooliſhneſs and extravagant relative worſhip. Stillingfleet.

Good men often blemiſh the reputation of their piety, by over-acting ſome things in religion; by an indiſcreet zeal about things wherein religion is not concerned. Tillotſon.

He over-acted his part; his paſſions, when once let looſe, were too impetuous to be managed. Atterbury.

To OVER-A'RCH. v. a. [over and arch.] To cover as with an arch.

Where high Ithaca o'erlooks the floods,
Brown with o'er-arching ſhades and pendant woods. Pope.

To OVER-A'WE. v. a. [over and awe.] To keep in awe by ſuperiour influence.

The king was preſent in perſon to overlook the magiſtrates, and to over-awe theſe ſubjects with the terror of his ſword. Spenſer.

Her graceful innocence, her every air
Of geſture, or leaſt action, over-aw'd
His malice. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

I could be content to be your chief tormentor, ever paying you mock reverence, and ſounding in your ears the empty title which inſpired you with preſumption, and over-awed my daughter to comply. Addiſon's Guardian.

A thouſand fears
Still over-awe when ſhe appears. Granville's Poems.

To OVER-BA'LANCE. v. a. To weigh down; to preponderate.

Not doubting but by the weight of reaſon I ſhould counterpoiſe the over-balancings of any factions. King Charles.

The hundred thouſand pounds per annum, wherein we over-balance them in trade, muſt be paid us in money. Locke.

When theſe important conſiderations are ſet before a rational being, acknowledging the truth of every article, ſhould a bare ſingle poſſibility be of weight enough to over-balance them. Rogers.

OVER-BA'LANCE. n. ſ. [over and balance.] Something more than equivalent.

Our exported commodities would, by the return, encreaſe the treaſure of this kingdom above what it can ever be by other means, than a mighty over-balance of our exported to our imported commodities. Temple.

The mind ſhould be kept in a perfect indifference, not inclining to either ſide, any further than the over-balance of probability gives it the turn of aſſent and belief. Locke.

OVER-BA'TTLE. adj. [Of this word I know not the derivation; batten is to grow fat, and to battle, is at Oxford to feed on truſt.] Too fruitful; exuberant.

In the church of God ſometimes it cometh to paſs, as in over-battle grounds; the fertile diſpoſition whereof is good, yet becauſe it exceedeth due proportion, it bringeth abundantly, through too much rankneſs, things leſs profitable, whereby that which principally it ſhould yield, either prevented in place or defrauded of nouriſhment, faileth. Hooker.

To OVER-BE'AR. v. a. [over and bear.] To repreſs; to ſubdue; to whelm; to bear down.

What more ſavage than man, if he ſee himſelf able by fraud to over-reach, or by power to over-bear the laws? Hooker.

My deſire
All continent impediments would o'er-bear,
That did oppoſe my will. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

The ocean o'er-peering of his liſt,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haſte
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'er-bears your officers. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

Our counſel, it pleas'd your highneſs
To over-bear. Shakeſpeare's King John.

Glo'ſter, thou ſhalt well perceive,
That nor in birth or for authority,
The biſhop will be over-borne by thee. Shakeſpeare.

The Turkiſh commanders, with all their forces, aſſailed the city, thruſting their men into the breaches by heaps, as if they would, with very multitude, have diſcouraged or over-born the Chriſtians. Knolles.

The point of reputation, when news firſt came of the battle loſt, did over-bear the reaſon of war. Bacon.

Yet fortune, valour, all is over-born
By numbers; as the long reſiſting bank
By the impetuous torrent. Denham.

A body may as well be over-born by the violence of a ſhallow, rapid ſtream, as ſwallowed up in the gulph of ſmooth water. L'Eſtrange.

Crowding on the laſt the firſt impel;
Till over-born with weight the Cyprians fell. Dryden.

The judgment, if ſwayed by the over-bearing of paſſion, and ſtored with lubricous opinions inſtead of clearly conceived truths, will be erroneous. Glanville's Scepſis.

Take care that the memory of the learner be not too much crowded with a tumultuous heap, or over-bearing multitude of documents at one time. Watts.

The horror or loathſomneſs of an object may over-bear the pleaſure which reſults from its greatneſs, novelty, or beauty. Addiſon.

To OVER-BI'D. v. a. [over and bid.] To offer more than equivalent.

You have o'er-bid all my paſt ſufferings,
And all my future too. Dryden's Spaniſh Fryar.

To OVER-BLO'W. v. n. [over and blow.] To be paſt its violence.

Led with delight, they thus beguile the way,
Until the bluſtring ſtorm is over-blown. Spenſer.

All thoſe tempeſts being over-blown, there long after aroſe a new ſtorm which over-run all Spain. Spenſer.

This ague fit of fear is over-blown,
An eaſy taſk it is to win our own. Shakeſpeare's Rich. II.

Seiz'd with ſecret joy,
When ſtorms are over-blown. Dryden's Virgil.

To OVER-BLO'W. v. a. [over and blow.] To drive away as clouds before the wind.

Some angel that beholds her there,
Inſtruct us to record what ſhe was here;
And when this cloud of ſorrow's over-blown,
Thro' the wide world we'll make her graces known. Waller.

OVER-BO'ARD. adv. [over and board. See BOARD.] Off the ſhip; out of the ſhip.

The great aſſembly met again; and now he that was the cauſe of the tempeſt being thrown over-board, there were hopes a calm ſhould enſue. Howel.

A merchant having a veſſel richly fraught at ſea in a ſtorm, there is but one certain way to ſave it, which is, by throwing its rich lading over-board. South.

The trembling dotard to the deck he drew,
And hoiſted up and over-board he threw;
This done, he ſeiz'd the helm. Dryden.

He obtained liberty to give them only one ſong before he leaped over-board, which he did, and then plunged into the ſea. L'Eſtr.

Though great ſhips were commonly bad ſea-boats, they had a ſuperiour force in a ſea engagement; the ſhock of them being ſometimes ſo violent, that it would throw the crew on the upper deck of leſſer ſhips over-board. Arbuthnot.

To* OVER-BU'LK. v. a. [over and bulk.] To oppreſs by bulk.

The feeding pride,
In rank Achilles, muſt or now be cropt,
Or ſhedding, breed a nurſery of like evils,
To over-bulk us all. Shakeſpeare's Troil. and Creſſida.

To* OVER-BU'RDEN. v. a. [over and burden.] To load with too great weight.

If ſhe were not cloyed with his company, and that ſhe thought not the earth over-burthened with him, ſhe would cool his fiery grief. Sidney.

To* OVER-BU'Y. v. a. [over and buy.] To buy too dear.

He, when want requires, is only wiſe,
Who ſlights not foreign aids, nor over-buys;
But on our native ſtrength, in time of need, relies. Dryd.

To* OVER-CA'RRY. v. a. [over and carry.] To hurry too far; to be urged to any thing violent or dangerous.

He was the king's uncle, but yet of no capacity to ſucceed; by reaſon whereof his natural affection and duty was leſs eaſy to be over-carried by ambition. Hayward.

To* OVER-CA'ST. v. a. part. over-caſt. [over and caſt.]

1. To cloud; to darken; to cover with gloom.

As they paſt,
The day with clouds was ſudden over-caſt. Spenſer.
Hie, Robin, over-caſt the night;
The ſtarry welkin cover thou anon,
With drooping fogs, as black as Acheron. Shakeſpeare.

Our days of age are ſad and over-caſt, in which we find that of all our vain paſſions and affections paſt, the ſorrow only abideth. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

I of fumes and humid vapours made,
No cloud in ſo ſerene a manſion find,
To over-caſt her ever ſhining mind. Waller.
Thoſe clouds that over-caſt our morn ſhall fly,
Diſpell'd to fartheſt corners of the ſky. Dryden.
The dawn is over-caſt, the morning lours,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day. Addiſon.

2. To cover. This ſenſe is hardly retained but by needle-women, who call that which is encircled with a thread, over-caſt.

When malice would work that which is evil, and in working avoid the ſuſpicion of an evil intent, the colour wherewith it over-caſteth itſelf is always a fair and plauſible pretence of ſeeking to further that which is good. Hooker.

Their arms abroad with gray moſs over-caſt,
And their green leaves trembling with every blaſt. Spenſer.

3. To rate too high in computation.

The king, in his accompt of peace and calms, did much over-caſt his fortunes, which proved full of broken ſeas, tides, and tempeſts. Bacon's Henry VII.

To* OVER-CHA'RGE. v. a. [over and charge.]

1. To oppreſs; to cloy; to ſurcharge.

On air we feed in every inſtant, and on meats but at times; and yet the heavy load of abundance, wherewith we oppreſs and over-charge nature, maketh her to ſink unawares in the mid-way. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

A man may as well expect to grow ſtronger by always eating, as wiſer by always reading. Too much over-charges nature, and turns more into diſeaſe than nouriſhment. Collier.

2. To load; to crowd too much.

Our language is over-charged with conſonants. Pope.

3. To burthen.

He whiſpers to his pillow
The ſecrets of his over-charged ſoul. Shakeſpeare.

4. To rate too high.

Here's Glo'ſter, a foe to citizens,
O'er-charging your free purſes with large fines. Shakeſpeare.

5. To fill too full.

Her heart is but o'er-charg'd; ſhe will recover. Shakeſpeare.

The fumes of paſſion do as really intoxicate, and confound the judging and diſcerning faculty, as the fumes of drink diſcompoſe and ſtupify the brain of a man over-charged with it. South.

If they would make diſtinct abſtract ideas of all the varieties in human actions, the number muſt be infinite, and the memory over-charged to little purpoſe. Locke.

The action of the Iliad and Æneid, in themſelves exceeding ſhort, are ſo beautifully extended by the invention of epiſodes, that they make up an agreeable ſtory ſufficient to employ the memory without over-charging it. Addiſon's Spectator.

6. To load with too great a charge.

They were
As cannons over-charg'd with double cracks. Shakeſpeare.
Who in deep mines, for hidden knowledge toils,
Like guns o'er-charg'd, breaks, miſſes, or recoils. Denham.

To* OVER-CLO'UD. v. a. [over and cloud.] To cover with clouds.

The ſilver empreſs of the night,
O'er-clouded, glimmers in a fainter light. Tickel.

To* OVER-CLO'Y. v. a. [over and cloy.] To fill beyond ſatiety.

A ſcum of Britons and baſe lackey peaſants,
Whom their o'er-cloy'd country vomits forth
To deſperate adventures and deſtruction. Shakeſpeare.

To* OVERCO'ME. v. a. pret. I overcame; part. paſſ. overcome; anciently overcomen, as in Spenſer. [overcomen, Dutch.]

1. To ſubdue; to conquer; to vanquiſh.

They overcomen, were deprived
Of their proud beauty, and the one moiety
Transform'd to fiſh, for their bold ſurquedry. Spenſer.
This wretched woman, overcome
Of anguiſh rather than of crime hath been. Spenſer.

Of whom a man is overcome, of the ſame is he brought in bondage. 2 Peter, ii. 19.

Fire by thicker air o'ercome,
And downward forc'd in earth's capacious womb,
Alters its particles; is fire no more. Prior.

2. To ſurmount.

Miranda is a conſtant relief to poor people in their misfortunes and accidents; there are ſometimes little misfortunes that happen to them, which of themſelves they could never be able to overcome. Law.

3. To overflow; to ſurcharge.

Th' unfallow'd glebe
Yearly o'ercomes the granaries with ſtores. Philips.

4. To come over or upon; to invade ſuddenly. Not in uſe.

Can't ſuch things be,
And overcome us like a ſummer's cloud,
Without our ſpecial wonder? Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

To* OVERCO'ME. v. n. To gain the ſuperiority.

That thou mighteſt be juſtified in thy ſayings, and mighteſt overcome when thou art judged. Romans, iii. 4.

OVERCO'MER. n. ſ. [from the verb.] He who overcomes.

To* OVER-COU'NT. v. a. [over and count.] To rate above the true value.

Thou know'ſt how much
We do o'er-count thee. Shakeſpeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

To* OVER-CO'VER. v. a. [over and cover.] To cover completely.

Shut me nightly in a charnel houſe,
O'er-cover'd quite with dead men's rattling bones,
With reeky ſhanks and yellow chapleſs ſkulls. Shakeſpeare.

To* OVER-CRO'W. v. a. [over and crow.] To crow as in triumph.

A baſe varlet, that being but of late grown out of the dunghill, beginneth now to over-crow ſo high mountains, and make himſelf the great protector of all out-laws. Spenſer.

To* OVERDO'. v. a. [over and do.] To do more than enough.

Any thing ſo over-done is from the purpoſe of playing; whoſe end is to hold the mirrour up to nature. Shakeſpeare.

Nature ſo intent upon finiſhing her work, much oftener over-does than under-does. You ſhall hear of twenty animals with two heads, for one that hath none. Grew.

When the meat is over-done, lay the fault upon your lady who hurried you. Swift.

To* OVER-DRE'SS. v. a. [over and dreſs.] To adorn laviſhly.

In all, let Nature never be forgot;
But treat the goddeſs like a modeſt fair,
Nor over-dreſs, nor leave her wholly bare. Pope.

To* OVER-DRI'VE. v. a. [over and drive.] To drive too hard, or beyond ſtrength.

The flocks and herds with young, if men ſhould over-drive one day, all will die. Geneſis, xxxiii. 13.

To* OVER-EY'E. v. a. [over and eye.]

1. To ſuperintend.
2. To obſerve; to remark.

I am doubtful of your modeſties,
Leſt over-eying of his odd behaviour,
You break into ſome merry paſſion. Shakeſpeare.

To* OVER-E'MPTY. v. a. [over and empty.] To make too empty.

The women would be loth to come behind the faſhion in newfangledneſs of the manner, if not in coſtlineſs of the matter, which might over-empty their huſbands purſes. Carew.

O'VERFAL. n. ſ. [over and fall.] Cataract.

Toſtatus addeth, that thoſe which dwell near thoſe falls of water, are deaf from their infancy, like thoſe that dwell near the overfals of Nilus. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

To* OVER-FLO'AT. v. n. [over and float.] To ſwim; to float.

The town is fill'd with ſlaughter, and o'er-floats,
With a red deluge, their increaſing moats. Dryden.

To* OVER-FLO'W. v. n. [over and flow.]

1. To be fuller than the brim can hold.

While our ſtrong walls ſecure us from the foe,
E'er yet with blood our ditches over-flow. Dryden.

Had I the ſame conſciouſneſs that I ſaw Noah's flood, as that I ſaw the over-flowing of the Thames laſt winter, I could not doubt, that I who ſaw the Thames over-flowed, and viewed the flood at the general deluge, was the ſame ſelf. Locke.

2. To exuberate; to abound.

A very ungrateful return to the author of all we enjoy, but ſuch as an over-flowing plenty too much inclines men to make. Rogers.

To* OVER-FLO'W. v. a. pret. over-flowed, part. paſſ. over-flowed or over-flown.

1. To fill beyond the brim.

Suppoſe thyſelf in as great a ſadneſs as ever did load thy ſpirit, would'ſt thou not bear it cheerfully if thou wert ſure that ſome excellent fortune would relieve and recompenſe thee ſo as to over-flow all thy hopes? Taylor.

New milk that all the winter never fails,
And all the ſummer over-flows the pails. Dryden.

2. To deluge; to drown; to over-run; to over-power.

The Scythians, at ſuch time as the northern nations over-flowed all Chriſtendom, came down to the ſea-coaſt. Spenſer.

Clanius over-flow'd th' unhappy coaſt. Dryden.

Do not the Nile and the Niger make yearly inundations in our days, as they have formerly done? and are not the countries ſo over-flown, ſtill ſituate between the tropicks? Bentley.

Sixteen hundred and odd years after the earth was made, it was over-flowed and deſtroyed in a deluge of water, that overſpread the face of the whole earth, from pole to pole, and from eaſt to weſt. Burnet.

Thus oft by mariners are ſhewn,
Earl Godwin's caſtles over-flown. Swift.

O'VER-FLOW. n. ſ. [over and flow.] Inundation; more than fulneſs; ſuch a quantity as runs over; exuberance.

Did he break out into tears?—
—In great meaſure.—
—A kind over-flow of kindneſs. Shakeſpeare.

Where there are great over-flows in fens, the drowning of them in winter maketh the ſummer following more fruitful; for that it keepeth the ground warm. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

It requires pains to find the coherence of abſtruſe writings: ſo that it is not to be wondered, that St. Paul's epiſtles have, with many, paſſed for disjointed pious diſcourſes, full of warmth and zeal and over-flows of light, rather than for calm, ſtrong, coherent reaſonings all through. Locke.

After every over-flow of the Nile, there was not always a menſuration. Arbuthnot on Coins.

The expreſſion may be aſcribed to an over-flow of gratitude in the general diſpoſition of Ulyſſes. Broome.

OVER-FLO'WING. n. ſ. [from over-flow.] Exuberance; copiouſneſs.

When men are young, they might vent the over-flowings of their fancy that way. Denham's Dedication.

When the over-flowings of ungodlineſs make us afraid, the miniſters of religion cannot better diſcharge their duty of oppoſing it. Rogers.

OVER-FLO'WINGLY. adv. [from over-flowing.] Exuberantly; in great abundance. A word not elegant nor in uſe.

Nor was it his indigence that forced him to make the world; but his goodneſs preſſed him to impart the goods which he ſo over-flowingly abounds with. Boyle.

To* OVER-FLY'. v. a. [over and fly.] To croſs by flight.

A ſailing kite
Can ſcarce o'er-fly them in a day and night. Dryden.

OVER-FO'RWARDNESS. n. ſ. [over and forwardneſs.] Too great quickneſs; too great readineſs.

By an over-forwardneſs in courts to give countenance to frivolous exceptions, though they make nothing to the true merit of the cauſe, it often happens that cauſes are not determined according to their merits. Hale.

To* OVER-FRE'IGHT. v. a. pret. over-freighted; part. over-fraught. [over and freight.] To load too heavily; to fill with too great quantity.

A boat over-freighted with people, in rowing down the river, was, by the extreme weather, ſunk. Carew.

Grief, that does not ſpeak,
Whiſpers the o'er-fraught heart and bids it break. Shakeſp.
Sorrow has ſo o'er-fraught
This ſinking barque, I ſhall not live to ſhew
How I abhor my firſt raſh crime. Denham.

To* OVER-GE'T. v. a. [over and get.] To paſs; to leave behind.

With ſix hours hard riding, through ſo wild places, as it was rather the cunning of my horſe ſometimes, than of myſelf, ſo rightly to hit the way, I over-got them a little before night. Sidney.

To* OVER-GLA'NCE. v. a. [over and glance.] To look haſtily over.

I have, but with a curſory eye,
O'er-glanc'd the articles. Shakeſpeare's Henry V.

To* OVER-GO'. v. a. [over and go.]

1. To ſurpaſs; to excel.

Thinking it beyond the degree of humanity to have a wit ſo far over-going his age, and ſuch dreadful terror proceed from ſo excellent beauty. Sidney.

Great Nature hath laid down at laſt,
That mighty birth wherewith ſo long ſhe went,
And over-went the times of ages paſt,
Here to lye in upon our ſoft content. Daniel.

2. To cover. Obſolete.

All which, my thoughts ſay, they ſhall never do,
But rather, that the earth ſhall overgo
Some one at leaſt. Chapman.

To* OVER-GO'RGE. v. a. [over and gorge.] To gorge too much.

Art thou grown great,
And, like ambitious Sylla, over-gorg'd? Shakeſpeare.

OVER-GRE'AT. adj. [over and great.] Too great.

Though putting the mind unprepared upon an unuſual ſtreſs ought to be avoided: yet this muſt not run it, by an over-great ſhyneſs of difficulties, into a lazy ſauntring about obvious things. Locke.

To* OVER-GRO'W. v. a. [over and grow.]

1. To cover with growth.

Roof and floor, and walls were all of gold,
But over-grown with duſt and old decay,
And hid in darkneſs that none could behold
The hue thereof. Spenſer.
The woods and deſart caves,
With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'er-grown,
And all their echos mourn. Milton.

2. To riſe above.

If the binds be very ſtrong and much over-grow the poles, ſome adviſe to ſtrike off their heads with a long ſwitch. Mortimer.

To* OVER-GRO'W. v. n. To grow beyond the fit or natural ſize.

One part of his army, with incredible labour, cut away thorough the thick and over-grown woods, and ſo came to Solyman. Knolles.

A huge over-grown ox was grazing in a meadow. L'Eſtrange.

Him for a happy man I own,
Whoſe fortune is not over-grown. Swift.

OVER-GRO'WTH. n. ſ. [over and growth.] Exuberant growth.

The over-growth of ſome complexion,
Oft breaking down the pales and forts of reaſon. Shakeſpeare.

The fortune in being the firſt in an invention, doth cauſe ſometimes a wonderful over-growth in riches. Bacon.

Suſpected to a ſequent king, who ſeeks
To ſtop their over-growth, as in-mate gueſts
Too numerous. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

To* OVER-HA'LE. v. a. [over and hale.]

1. To ſpread over.

The welked Phœbus gan availe
His weary wain, and now the froſty night
Her mantle black thro' heaven gan over-hale. Spenſer.

2. To examine over again: as, he over-haled my account.

To* OVER-HA'NG. v. a. [over and hang.] To jut over; to impend over.

Lend the eye a terrible aſpect,
Let the brow overwhelm it,
As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'er-hang and jutty his confounded baſe. Shakeſpeare.
Hide me, ye foreſts, in your cloſeſt bow'rs,
Where flows the mum'ring brook, inviting dreams,
Where bord'ring hazle over-hangs the ſtreams. Gay.

If you drink tea upon a promontory that over-hangs the ſea, it is preferable to an aſſembly. Pope.

To* OVER-HA'NG. v. n. To jut over.

The reſt was craggy cliff, that over-hung
Still as it roſe, impoſſible to climb. Milton.

To* OVER-HA'RDEN. v. a. [over and harden.] To make too hard.

By laying it in the air, it has acquired ſuch a hardneſs, that it was brittle, like over-hardened ſteel. Boyle.

OVER-HE'AD. adv. [over and head.] Aloft; in the zenith; above; in the cieling.

Over-head the moon
Sits arbitreſs, and nearer to the earth
Wheels her pale courſe. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

The four ſtars over-head, repreſent the four children. Addiſon.

To* OVER-HE'AR. v. a. [over and hear.] To hear thoſe who do not mean to be heard.

I am inviſible,
And I will over-hear their conference. Shakeſpeare.

They had a full ſight of the Infanta at a maſk dancing, having over-heard two gentlemen who were tending towards that ſight, after whom they preſſed. Wotton.

That ſuch an enemy we have who ſeeks
Our ruin, both by thee inform'd I learn,
And from the parting angel over-heard. Milton.

They were ſo loud in their diſcourſe, that a black-berry from the next hedge over-heard them. L'Eſtrange.

The nurſe,
Though not the words, the murmurs over-heard. Dryden.

To* OVER-JO'Y. v. a. [over and joy.] To tranſport; to raviſh.

He that puts his confidence in God only, is neither over-joyed in any great good things of this life, nor ſorrowful for a little thing. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

The biſhop, partly aſtoniſhed and partly over-joyed with theſe ſpeeches, was ſtruck into a ſad ſilence for a time. Hayward.

This love-ſick virgin, over-joy'd to find
The boy alone, ſtill follow'd him behind. Addiſon.

OVER-JO'Y. n. ſ. Tranſport; ecſtaſy.

The mutual conf'rence that my mind hath had,
Makes me the bolder to ſalute my king
With ruder terms; ſuch as my wit affords,
And over-joy of heart doth miniſter. Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.

To Overla´bour. v. a. [over and labour.] To take too much pains on any thing; to haraſs with toil.

She without noiſe will over-ſee
His children and his family;
And order all things till he come,
Sweaty and over-labour'd home. Dryden.

To Overla´de. v. a. [over and lade.] To overburthen.

Thus to throng and over-lade a ſoul
With love, and then to have a room for fear,
That ſhall all that controul,
What is it but to rear
Our paſſions and our hopes on high,
That thence they may deſcry
The nobleſt way how to deſpair and die? Suckling.

Overla´rge. adj. [over and large.] Larger than enough.

Our attainments cannot be over-large, and yet we manage a narrow fortune very unthriftily. Collier.

Overla´shingly. adv. [over and laſh.] With exaggeration. A mean word, now obſolete.

Although I be far from their opinion who write too overlaſhingly, that the Arabian tongue is in uſe in two third parts of the inhabited world, yet I find that it extendeth where the religion of Mahomet is profeſſed. Brerewood.

To Overla´y. v. a. [over and lay.]

1. To oppreſs by too much weight or power.

Some commons are barren, the nature is ſuch,
And ſome over-layeth the commons too much. Tuſſer.

Not only that mercy which keepeth from being over-laid and oppreſt, but mercy which ſaveth from being touched with grievous miſeries. Hooker.

When any country is over-laid by the multitude which live upon it, there is a natural neceſſity compelling it to diſburthen itſelf and lay the load upon others. Raleigh.

We praiſe the things we hear with much more willingneſs than thoſe we ſee; becauſe we envy the preſent, and reverence the paſt; thinking ourſelves inſtructed by the one, and over-laid by the other. Ben Jonſon.

Good laws had been antiquated by the courſe of time, or overlaid by the corruption of manners. King Charles.

Our ſins have overlaid our hopes. King Charles.

The ſtrong Emetrius came in Arcite's aid,
And Palamon with odds was over-laid. Dryden.

2. To ſmother with too much or too cloſe covering.

Like mothers, which their infants over-lay. Milton.
The new-born babes by nurſes over-laid. Dryden.

3. To ſmother; to cruſh; to overwhelm.

They quickly ſtifled and over-laid thoſe infant principles of piety and virtue, ſown by God in their hearts; ſo that they brought a voluntary darkneſs and ſtupidity upon their minds. South's Sermons.

The gods have made your noble mind for me,
And her inſipid ſoul for Ptolemy:
A heavy lump of earth without deſire,
A heap of aſhes that o'er-lays your fire. Dryden.

The ſtars, no longer over-laid with weight,
Exert their heads from underneath the maſs,
And upward ſhoot. Dryden.

Seaſon the paſſions of a child with devotion, which ſeldom dies; though it may ſeem extinguiſhed for a while, it breaks out as ſoon as misfortunes have brought the man to himſelf. The fire may be covered and over-laid, but cannot be entirely quenched and ſmothered. Addiſon's Spectator.

In preaching, no men ſucceed better than thoſe who truſt to the fund of their own reaſon, advanced but not over-laid by commerce with books. Swift.

4. To cloud; to over-caſt.

Phœbus' golden face it did attaint,
As when a cloud his beams doth over-lay. Spenſer.

5. To cover ſuperficially.

The over-laying of their chapiters was of ſilver, and all the pillars were filleted with ſilver. Exodus, xxxviii. 17.

By his preſcript a ſanctuary is fram'd
Of cedar, over-laid with gold. Milton.

6. To join by ſomething laid over.

Thou us impower'd
To fortify thus far, and over-lay,
With this portentous bridge, the dark abyſs. Milton.

To Overle´ap. v. a. [over and leap.] To paſs by a jump.

A ſtep
On which I muſt fall down or elſe o'er-leap,
For in my way it lies. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

In vain did Nature's wiſe command
Divide the waters from the land;
If daring ſhips and men prophane
Th' eternal fences over-leap,
And paſs at will the boundleſs deep. Dryden.

O´verleather. n. ſ. [over and leather.] The part of the ſhoe that covers the foot.

I have ſometimes more feet than ſhoes; or ſuch ſhoes as my toes look through the over-leather. Shakeſpeare.

Overli´ght. n. ſ. [over and light.] Too ſtrong light.

Overoffi´cious. adj. [over and officious.] Too buſy; too importunate.

This is an over-officious truth, and is always at a man's heels; ſo that if he looks about him, he muſt take notice of it. Collier.

To Overpa´ss. v. a. [over and paſs.]

1. To croſs.

I ſtood on a wide river's bank,
Which I muſt needs o'er-paſs,
When on a ſudden Torriſmond appear'd,
Gave me his hand, and led me lightly o'er. Dryden.

What have my Scyllas and my Syrtes done,
When theſe they over-paſs, and thoſe they ſhun? Dryden.

2. To over-look; to paſs with diſregard.

The complaint about pſalms and hymns might as well be over-paſt without any anſwer, as it is without any cauſe brought forth. Hooker.

I read the ſatire thou entitleſt firſt,
And laid aſide the reſt, and over-paſt,
And ſwore, I thought the writer was accurſt,
That his firſt ſatire had not been his laſt. Harrington.

Remember that Pellean conqueror,
A youth, how all the beauties of the eaſt
He ſlightly view'd, and ſlightly over-paſs'd. Milton.

3. To omit in a reckoning.

Arithmetical progreſſion demonſtrates how faſt mankind would increaſe, over-paſſing as miraculous, though indeed natural, that example of the Iſraelites who were multiplied in two hundred and fifteen years, from ſeventy to ſixty thouſand able men. Raleigh.

4. To omit; not to receive; not to compriſe.

If the grace of him which ſaveth over-paſs ſome, ſo that the prayer of the church for them be not received, this we may leave to the hidden judgments of righteouſneſs. Hooker.

Overpa´st. part. adj. [from over-paſs.] Gone; paſt.

What can'ſt thou ſwear by now?—
—By time to come.—
That thou haſt wronged in the time o'er-paſt. Shakeſpeare.

To Overpa´y. v. a. [over and pay.] To reward beyond the price.

Take this purſe of gold,
And let me buy your friendly help thus far,
Which I will over-pay, and pay again,
When I have found it. Shakeſpeare.

You have yourſelf your kindneſs over-paid,
He ceaſes to oblige who can upbraid. Dryden.

Wilt thou with pleaſure hear thy lover's ſtrains,
And with one heav'nly ſmile o'er-pay his pains? Prior.

To Overpe´rch. v. a. [over and perch.] To fly over.

With love's light wings did I o'er-perch theſe walls,
For ſtony limits cannot hold love out. Shakeſpeare.

To Overpe´er. v. a. [over and peer.] To over-look; to hover above. It is now out of uſe.

The ocean over-peering of his liſt,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haſte,
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'er-bears your officers. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

Your argoſies with portly ſail,
Do over-peer the petty traffickers,
That curt'ſy to them, do them reverence. Shakeſpeare.

Mountainous error wou'd be too highly heapt,
For truth to over-peer. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

Thus yields the cedar to the ax's edge,
Whoſe top branch over-peer'd Jove's ſpreading tree,
And kept low ſhrubs from winter's pow'rful wind. Shakeſpeare.

They are invincible by reaſon of the over-peering mountains that back the one, and ſlender fortifications of the other to land-ward. Sandys's Journey.

O´verplus. n. ſ. [over and plus.] Surplus; what remains more than ſufficient.

Some other ſinners there are, from which that overplus of ſtrength in perſuaſion doth ariſe. Hooker's Preface.

A great deal too much of it was made, and the overplus remained ſtill in the mortar. L'Eſtrange.

It would look like a fable to report, that this gentleman gives away all which is the overplus of a great fortune. Addiſon.

To Overply´. v. a. [over and ply.] To employ too laboriouſly.

What ſupports me, doſt thou aſk?
The conſcience, friend, t' have loſt them over-ply'd,
In liberty's defence. Milton's Poems.

To Overpo´ise. v. a. [over and poiſe.] To outweigh.

Whether cripples who have loſt their thighs will float; their lungs being able to waft up their bodies, which are in others over-poiſed by the hinder legs; we have not made experiment. Brown.

The ſcale
O'er-pois'd by darkneſs, lets the night prevail;
And day, that lengthen'd in the ſummer's height,
Shortens till winter, and is loſt in night. Creech.

Overpo´ise. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Preponderant weight.

Horace, in his firſt and ſecond book of odes, was ſtill riſing, but came not to his meridian till the third. After which his judgment was an over-poiſe to his imagination. He grew too cautious to be bold enough, for he deſcended in his fourth by ſlow degrees. Dryd.

Some over-poiſe of ſway, by turns they ſhare,
In peace the people, and the prince in war. Dryden.

To Overpo´wer. v. a. [over and power.] To be predominant over; to oppreſs by ſuperiority.

Now in danger try'd, now known in arms
Not to be over-power'd. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

As much light over-powers the eye, ſo they who have weak eyes, when the ground is covered with ſnow, are wont to complain of too much light. Boyle.

Reaſon allows none to be confident, but him only who governs the world, who knows all things, and can do all things; and can neither be ſurpriſed nor over-powered. South.

After the death of Craſſus, Pompey found himſelf outwitted by Cæſar; he broke with him, over-powered him in the ſenate, and cauſed many unjuſt decrees to paſs againſt him. Dryden.

The hiſtorians make theſe mountains the ſtandards of the riſe of the water; which they could never have been, had they not been ſtanding when it did ſo riſe and over-power the earth. Woodward.

Inſpiration is, when ſuch an over-powering impreſſion of any propoſition is made upon the mind by God himſelf, that gives a convincing and indubitable evidence of the truth and divinity of it. Watts's Logick.

To Overpre´ss. v. a. [over and preſs.] To bear upon with irreſiſtible force; to overwhelm; to cruſh.

Having an excellent horſe under him, when he was over-preſſed by ſome, he avoided them. Sidney.

Michael's arm main promontories flung,
And over-preſs'd whole legions weak with ſin. Roſcommon.

When a prince enters on a war, he ought maturely to conſider whether his coffers be full, his people rich by a long peace and free trade, not over-preſſed with many burthenſome taxes. Swift.

To Overpri´ze. v. a. [over and prize.] To value at too high price.

Parents over-prize their children, while they behold them through the vapours of affection. Wotton.

OVERRA´NK. adj. [over and rank.] Too rank.

It produces over-rank binds. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

To OVERRA´TE. v. a. [over and rate.] To rate at too much.

While vain ſhows and ſcenes you over-rate,
'Tis to be fear'd, —— ——
That as a fire the former houſe o'erthrew,
Machines and tempeſts will deſtroy the new. Dryden.

To avoid the temptations of poverty, it concerns us not to over-rate the conveniences of our ſtation, and in eſtimating the proportion fit for us, to fix it rather low than high; for our deſires will be proportioned to our wants, real or imaginary, and our temptations to our deſires. Rogers.

To OVERRE´ACH. v. a. [over and reach.]

1. To riſe above.

The mountains of Olympus, Atho, and Atlas, over-reach and ſurmount all winds and clouds. Raleigh.

Sixteen hundred years after the earth was made, it was overflowed in a deluge of water in ſuch exceſs, that the floods over-reached the tops of the higheſt mountains. Burnet.

2. To deceive; to go beyond; to circumvent. A ſagacious man is ſaid to have a long reach.

What more cruel than man, if he ſee himſelf able by fraud to over-reach, or by power to over-bear the laws whereunto he ſhould be ſubject? Hooker.

I have laid my brain in the ſun and dried it, that it wants matter to prevent ſo groſs over-reaching. Shakeſpeare.

Shame to be overcome, or over-reach'd,
Would utmoſt vigour raiſe, and rais'd unite. Milton.

A man who had been matchleſs held
In cunning, over-reach'd where leaſt he thought,
To ſave his credit, and for very ſpight
Still will be tempting him who foils him ſtill. Milton.

There is no pleaſanter encounter than a trial of ſkill betwixt ſharpers to over-reach one another. L'Eſtrange.

Forbidding oppreſſion, defrauding and over-reaching one another, perfidiouſneſs and treachery. Tillotſon.

We may no more ſue for them than we can tell a lie, or ſwear an unlawful oath, or over-reach in their cauſe, or be guilty of any other tranſgreſſion. Kettleworth.

Such a principle is ambition, or a deſire of fame, by which many vicious men are over-reached, and engaged contrary to their natural inclinations in a glorious and laudable courſe of action. Addiſon.

John had got an impreſſion that Lewis was ſo deadly cunning a man, that he was afraid to venture himſelf alone with him; at laſt he took heart of grace; let him come up, quoth he, it is but ſticking to my point, and he can never over-reach me. Hiſt. of J. Bull.

To OVERRE´ACH. v. n. A horſe is ſaid to over-reach, when he brings his hinder feet too far forwards, and ſtrikes his toes againſt his fore-ſhoes. Farrier's Dict.

OVERRE´ACHER. n. ſ. [from over-reach.] A cheat; a deceiver.

To OVERRE´AD. v. a. [over and read.] To peruſe.

The contents of this is the return of the duke; you ſhall anon over-read it at your pleaſure. Shakeſpeare.

To OVER-RE´D. v. a. [over and red.] To ſmear with red.

Prick thy face and over-red thy fear,
Thou lilly-liver'd boy. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

To OVER-RI´PEN. v. a. [over and ripen.] To make too ripe.

Why droops my lord, like over-ripen'd corn,
Hanging the head with Ceres' plenteous load? Shakeſpeare.

To OVERRO´AST. v. a. [over and roaſt.] To roaſt too much.

'Twas burnt and dried away,
And better 'twere, that both of us did faſt,
Since of ourſelves, ourſelves are cholerick,
Than feed it with ſuch over-roaſted fleſh. Shakeſpeare.

To OVERRU´LE. v. a. [over and rule.]

1. To influence with predominant power; to be ſuperior in authority.

Which humour perceiving to over-rule me, I ſtrave againſt it. Sidney.

That which the church by her eccleſiaſtical authority ſhall probably think and deſire to be true or good, muſt in congruity of reaſon over-rule all other inferior arguments whatſoever. Hooker.

Except our own private, and but probable reſolutions, be by the law of publick determinations over-ruled, we take away all poſſibility of ſociable life in the world. Hooker.

What if they be ſuch as will be over-ruled with ſome one, whom they dare not diſpleaſe? Whitgifte.

His paſſion and animoſity over-ruled his conſcience. Clarendon.

A wiſe man ſhall over-rule his ſtars, and have a greater influence upon his own content, than all the conſtellations and planets of the firmament. Taylor.

He is acted by a paſſion which abſolutely over-rules him; and ſo can no more recover himſelf, than a bowl rolling down an hill ſtop itſelf in the midſt of its career. South.

'Tis temerity for men to venture their lives upon unequal encounters; unleſs where they are obliged by an over-ruling impulſe of conſcience and duty. L'Eſtrange.

A man may, by the influence of an over-ruling planet, be inclined to luſt, and yet by the force of reaſon overcome that bad influence. Swift.

2. To govern with high authority; to ſuperintend.

Wherefore does he not now come forth and openly over-rule, as in other matters he is accuſtomed? Hayward.

3. To ſuperſede: as in law to over-rule a plea, is to reject it as incompetent.

Thirty acres make a farthing land, nine farthings a Corniſh acre, and four Corniſh acres a knight's fee. But this rule is over-ruled to a greater or leſſer quantity, according to the fruitfulneſs or barrenneſs of the ſoil. Carew.

To OVERRU´N. v. a. [over and run.]

1. To haraſs by incurſions; to ravage; to rove over in a hoſtile manner.

Thoſe barbarous nations that over-ran the world, poſſeſſed thoſe dominions, whereof they are now ſo called. Spenſer.

Till the tears ſhe ſhed,
Like envious floods o'er-ran her lovely face,
She was the faireſt creature in the world. Shakeſpeare.

They err, who count it glorious to ſubdue
By conqueſt far and wide, to over-run
Large countries, and in field great battles win,
Great cities by aſſault. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

The nine
Their fainting foes to ſhameful flight compell'd,
And with reſiſtleſs force o'er-run the field. Dryden.

Guſtavus Adolphus could not enter this part of the empire after having over-run moſt of the reſt. Addiſon.

A commonwealth may be over-run by a powerful neighbour, which may produce bad conſequences upon your trade and liberty. Swift's Miſcellanies.

2. To out-run; to paſs behind.

Pyrocles being come to ſixteen, over-run his age in growth, ſtrength, and all things following it, that not Muſidorus could perform any action on horſe or foot more ſtrongly, or deliver that ſtrength more nimbly, or become the delivery more gracefully, or employ all more virtuouſly. Sidney.

We may out-run
By violent ſwiftneſs, that which we run at,
And loſe by over-running. Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

Ahimaz ran by the way of the plain, and over-ran Cuſhi. 2 Sam.

Galilæus noteth, that if an open trough, wherein water is, be driven faſter than the water can follow, the water gathereth upon an heap towards the hinder end, where the motion began; which he ſuppoſeth, holding the motion of the earth to be the cauſe of the ebbing and flowing of the ocean; becauſe the earth over-runneth the water. Bacon.

3. To overſpread; to cover all over.

With an over-running flood he will make an utter end of the place. Nahum, i. 8.

This diſpoſition of the parts of the earth, ſhews us the foot-ſteps of ſome kind of ruin which happened in ſuch a way, that at the ſame time a general flood of waters would neceſſarily over-run the whole earth. Burnet.

His tears defac'd the ſurface of the well,
And now the lovely face but half appears,
O'er-run with wrinkles and deform'd with tears. Addiſon.

4. To miſchief by great numbers; to peſter.

To flatter fooliſh men into a hope of life where there is none, is much the ſame with betraying people into an opinion, that they are in a virtuous and happy ſtate, when they are over-run with paſſion, and drowned in their luſts. L'Eſtrange.

Were it not for the inceſſant labours of this induſtrious animal, Egypt would be over-run with crocodiles. Addiſon.

Such proviſion made, that a country ſhould not want ſprings as were convenient for it; nor be over-run with them, and afford little or nothing elſe; but a ſupply every where ſuitable to the neceſſities of each climate and region of the globe. Woodward's Nat. Hiſtory.

5. To injure by treading down.

6. Among printers, to be obliged to change the diſpoſition of the lines and words in correcting, by reaſon of the inſertions.

To OVERRU´N. v. n. To overflow; to be more than full.

Though you have left me,
Yet ſtill my ſoul o'er-runs with fondneſs towards you. Smith.

Cattle in incloſures ſhall always have freſh paſture, that now is all trampled and over-run. Spenſer.

To OVERSE´E. v. a. [over and ſee.]

1. To ſuperintend; to overlook.

He had charge my diſcipline to frame,
And tutors nouriture to overſee. Spenſer.

She without noiſe will overſee
His children and his family. Dryden.

2. To overlook; to paſs by unheeded; to omit.

I who reſolve to overſee
No lucky opportunity,
Will go to council to adviſe
Which way t' encounter, or ſurpriſe. Hudibras.

OVERSE´EN. part. [from overſee.] Miſtaken; deceived.

A common received error is never utterly overthrown, till ſuch time as we go from ſigns unto cauſes, and ſhew ſome manifeſt root or fountain thereof common unto all, whereby it may clearly appear how it hath come to paſs that ſo many have been overſeen. Hooker.

Such overſeers, as the overſeers of this building, would be ſo overſeen as to make that which is narrower, contain that which is larger. Holyday.

They rather obſerved what he had done and ſuffered for the king and for his country, without farther enquiring what he had omitted to do, or been overſeen in doing. Clarendon.

OVERSE´ER. n. ſ. [from overſee.]

1. One who overlooks; a ſuperintendent.

There are in the world certain voluntary overſeers of all books, whoſe cenſure would fall ſharp on us. Hooker.

Jehiel and Azariah were overſeers unto Cononiah. Chronicles.

To entertain a gueſt, with what a care
Wou'd he his houſhold ornaments prepare;
Haraſs his ſervants, and as o'erſeer ſtand,
To keep them working with a threat'ning wand.
Clean all my plate, he cries. Dryden.

2. An officer who has the care of the parochial proviſion for the poor.

The church-wardens and overſeers of the poor might find it poſſible to diſcharge their duties, whereas now in the greater out pariſhes many of the poorer pariſhioners, through neglect, do periſh for want of ſome heedful eye to overlook them. Graunt.

To OVERSE´T. v. a. [over and ſet.]

1. To turn bottom upwards; to throw off the baſis; to ſubvert.

The tempeſts met,
The ſailors maſter'd, and the ſhip o'er-ſet. Dryden.

It is forced through the hiatus's at the bottom of the ſea with ſuch vehemence, that it puts the ſea into horrible perturbation, even when there is not the leaſt breath of wind; overſetting ſhips in the harbours, and ſinking them. Woodward.

Would the confederacy exert itſelf, as much to annoy the enemy, as they do for their defence, we might bear them down with the weight of our armies, and over-ſet the whole power of France. Addiſon.

That caught at mountains with out-ſtretched arms. Shakeſp.

Out-ſtretch'd he lay, on the cold ground, and oft
Curs'd his creation. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

A mountain, at whoſe verdant feet
A ſpacious plain, out-ſtretch'd in circuit wide
Lay pleaſant. Milton's Paradiſe Regain'd.

Does Theſeus burn?
And muſt not ſhe with out-ſtretch'd arms receive him?
And with an equal ardour meet his vows? Smith.

To Ou´tstrip. v. a. [This word Skinner derives from out and ſpritzen, to ſpout, German. I know not whether it might not have been originally out-trip, the ſ being afterward inſerted.] To outgo; to leave behind in a race.

If thou wilt out-ſtrip death, go croſs the ſeas,
And live with Richmond from the reach of hell. Shakeſpeare.

Do not ſmile at me, that I boaſt her off;
For thou ſhalt find, ſhe will out-ſtrip all praiſe,
And make it halt behind her. Shakeſpeare's Tempeſt.

Thou both their graces in thyſelf haſt more
Out-ſtript, than they did all that went before. Ben Jonſon.

My ſoul, more earneſtly releas'd,
Will out-ſtrip hers; as bullets flown before
A later bullet may o'ertake, the powder being more. Donne.

A fox may be out-witted, and a hare out-ſtript. L'Eſtrange.

He got the ſtart of them in point of obedience, and thereby outſtript them at length in point of knowledge. South.

Than my out-wall, open this purſe, and take
What it contains. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

Ou´tward. adj. [uꞇƿeaꞃꝺ, Saxon.]

1. Materially external.
2. External; oppoſed to inward: viſible.

If theſe ſhews be not outward, which of you
But is four Volſcians? Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

Oh what may man within him hide,
Though angel on the outward ſide! Shakeſpeare.

His calls and invitations of us to that repentance, not only outward, in the miniſtry of the word, but alſo inward, by the motions of the ſpirit. Duty of Man.

He took a low'ring leave; but who can tell
What outward hate might inward love conceal? Dryden.

3. Extrinſick; adventitious.

Princes have their titles for their glories,
An outward honour, for an inward toil. Shakeſpeare.

Part in peace, and having mourn'd your ſin
For outward Eden loſt, find paradiſe within. Dryden.

4. Foreign, not inteſtine.

It was intended to raiſe an outward war to join with ſome ſedition within doors. Hayward.

5. Tending to the out-parts.

The fire will force its outward way,
Or, in the priſon pent, conſume the prey. Dryden.

6. [In theology.] Carnal; corporeal; not ſpiritual.

When the ſoul being inwardly moved to lift itſelf up by prayer, the outward man is ſurprized in ſome other poſture; God will rather look to the inward motions of the mind, than to the outward form of the body. Duppa.

We may alſo pray againſt temporal puniſhments, that is, any outward affliction, but this with ſubmiſſion to God's will, according to the example of Chriſt. Duty of Man.

Ou'tward. n. ſ. External form.

I do not think
So fair an outward, and ſuch ſtuff within,
Endows a man but him. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

Ou'tward. adv.

1. To foreign parts: as, a ſhip outward bound.
2. To the outer parts.

Ou'twardly. adv. [from outward.]

1. Externally: oppoſed to inwardly.

That which inwardly each man ſhould be, the church outwardly ought to teſtify. Hooker.

Griev'd with diſgrace, remaining in their fears:
However ſeeming outwardly content,
Yet th' inward touch their wounded honour bears. Daniel.

2. In appearance; not ſincerely.

Many wicked men are often touched with ſome inward reverence for that goodneſs which they cannot be perſuaded to practiſe; nay, which they outwardly ſeem to deſpiſe. Spratt.

Ou'twards. adv. Towards the out parts.

Do not black bodies conceive heat more eaſily from light than thoſe of other colours do, by reaſon that the light falling on them is not reflected outwards, but enters the bodies, and is often reflected and refracted within them until it be ſtifled and loſt? Newton's Opticks.

To Outwea'r. v. a. [out and wear.]

1. To paſs tediouſly.

By the ſtream, if I the night out-wear,
Thus ſpent already, how ſhall nature bear
The dews deſcending and nocturnal air. Pope.

2. To laſt longer than ſomething elſe.

To Outwe'ed. v. a. [out and weed.] To extirpate as a weed.

Wrath is a fire, and jealouſy a weed;
The ſparks ſoon quench, the ſpringing weed out-weed. Spenſer.

To Outwei'gh. v. a. [out and weigh.]

1. To exceed in gravity.

Theſe inſtruments require ſo much ſtrength for the ſupporting of the weight to be moved, as may be equal unto it, beſides that other ſuper-added power whereby it is out-weighed and moved. Wilkins.

2. To preponderate; to excel in value or influence.

If any think brave death out-weighs bad life
Let him expreſs his diſpoſition. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

All your care is for your prince I ſee,
Your truth to him out-weighs your love to me. Dryden.

Whenever he finds the hardſhip of his ſlavery out-weigh the value of his life, it is in his power, by reſiſting the will of his maſter, to draw on himſelf the death he deſires. Locke.

The marriage of the clergy is attended with the poverty of ſome of them, which is balanced and out-weighed by many ſingle advantages. Atterbury.

To Outwe'll. v. a. [out and well.] To pour out. Not in uſe.

As when old father Nilus 'gins to ſwell,
With timely pride about the Ægyptian vale,
His fattie waves do fertile ſlime out-well,
And overflow each plain and lowly dale. Spenſer.

To Outwi't. v. a. [out and wit.] To cheat; to overcome by ſtratagem.

The truer hearted any man is, the more liable he is to be impoſed on; and then the world calls it out-witting a man, when he is only out-knaved. L'Eſtrange.

Juſtice forbids defrauding, or going beyond our brother in any manner, when we can over-reach and out-wit him in the ſame. Kettlewell.

After the death of Craſſus, Pompey found himſelf out-witted by Cæſar, and broke with him. Dryden.

Nothing is more equal in juſtice, and indeed more natural in the direct conſequence of effects and cauſes, than for men wickedly wiſe to out-wit themſelves; and for ſuch as wreſtle with Providence, to trip up their own heels. South.

Ou'twork. n. ſ. [out and work.] The parts of a fortification next the enemy.

Take care of our out-work, the navy royal, which are the walls of the kingdom; and every great ſhip is an impregnable fort; and our many ſafe and commodious ports as the redoubts to ſecure them. Bacon.

Death hath taken in the out-works,
And now aſſails the fort; I feel, I feel him
Gnawing my heart-ſtrings. Denham.

Outwo'rn. part. [from out-wear.] Conſumed or deſtroyed by uſe.

Better at home lie bed-rid, idle,
Inglorious, unemploy'd, with age out-worn. Milton.

To Outwre'st. v. a. [out and wreſt.] To extort by violence.

The growing anguiſh
Rankled ſo ſore and feſter'd inwardly,
Till that the truth thereof I did out-wreſt. Spenſer.

Outwrou'ght. part. [out and wrought.] Out-done; exceeded in efficacy.

In your violent acts,
The fall of torrents and the noiſe of tempeſts,
The boyling of Carybdis, the ſea's wildneſs,
The eating force of flames, and wings of winds,
Be all out-wrought by your tranſcendent furies. Ben Jonſon.

To Outwo'rth. v. a. [out and worth.] To excel in value.

A beggar's book
Out-worths a noble's blood. Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

To Owe. v. a. [eg, aa, I owe, or I ought, Iſlandick.]

1. To be obliged to pay; to be indebted.

I owe you much, and, like a witleſs youth,
That which I owe is loſt. Shakeſpeare's Merchant of Venice.

Let none ſeek needleſs cauſes to approve
The faith they owe. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

A ſon owes help and honour to his father; and is a ſubject leſs indebted to the king? Holyday.

All your parts of pious duty done,
You owe your Ormond nothing but a ſon. Dryden.

Thou haſt deſerv'd more love than I can ſhow,
But 'tis thy fate to give, and mine to owe. Dryden.

If, upon the general balance of trade, Engliſh merchants owe to foreigners one hundred thouſand pounds, if commodities do not, our money muſt go out to pay it. Locke.

2. To be obliged to aſcribe; to be obliged for.

By me upheld, that he may know how frail
His fall'n condition is, and to me owe
All his deliv'rance, and to none but me. Milton.

3. To have from any thing as the conſequence of a cauſe.

O deem thy fall not ow'd to man's decree,
Jove hated Greece, and puniſh'd Greece in thee. Pope.

4. To poſſeſs; to be the right owner of. For owe, which is, in this ſenſe, obſolete, we now uſe own.

Thou doſt her uſurp
The name thou ow'ſt not, and haſt put thyſelf
Upon this iſland as a ſpy. Shakeſpeare's Tempeſt.

Fate, ſhew thy force; ourſelves we do not owe;
What is decreed muſt be; and be this ſo. Shakeſpeare.

Not poppy nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowſy ſirups of the world,
Shall ever med'cine thee to that ſweet ſleep
Which thou owed'ſt yeſterday. Shakeſpeare's Othello.

If any happy eye
This roving wanton ſhall deſcry,
Let the finder ſurely know
Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe
The winged wand'rer. Craſhaw.

Owing. part. [from owe. A practice has long prevailed among writers, to uſe owing, the active participle of owe, in a paſſive ſenſe, for owed or due. Of this impropriety ſome writers were aware, and having no quick ſenſe of the force of Engliſh words, have uſed due, in the ſenſe of conſequence or imputation, which by other writers is only uſed of debt. We ſay, the money is due to me; they ſay likewiſe, the effect is due to the cauſe.]

1. Conſequential.

This was owing to an indifference to the pleaſures of life, and an averſion to the pomps of it. Atterbury.

2. Due as a debt. Here due is undoubtedly the proper word.

You are both too bold;
I'll teach you all what's owing to your queen. Dryden.

The debt, owing from one country to the other, cannot be paid without real effects ſent thither to that value. Locke.

3. Imputable to, as an agent.

If we eſtimate things, what in them is owing to nature, and what to labour, we ſhall find in moſt of them $\frac{99}{100}$ to be on the account of labour. Locke.

The cuſtom of particular impeachments was not limited any more than that of ſtruggles between nobles and commons; the ruin of Greece was owing to the former, as that of Rome was to the latter. Swift.

Owl. }
O'wlet. } n. ſ. [ule, Saxon; hulote, French and Scottiſh.] A bird that flies about in the night and catches mice.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's ſting,
Lizard's leg, and owlet's wing
For a charm. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

Return to her!
No! rather I abjure all roofs, and chuſe
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl. Shakeſpeare.

'Twas when the dog-ſtar's unpropitious ray
Smote ev'ry brain, and wither'd every bay;
Sick was the ſun, the owl forſook his bow'r. Dunciad.

Then lady Cynthia, miſtreſs of the ſhade,
Goes, with the faſhionable owls, to bed. Young.

O'wler. n. ſ. One who carries contraband goods: in the legal ſenſe, one that carries out wool illicitely. Perhaps from the neceſſity of carrying on an illicit trade by night: but rather, I believe, a corruption of wooller, by a colloquial neglect of the w, ſuch as is often obſerved in woman, and by which goodwife is changed to goody. Wooller, ooller, owler.

By running goods, theſe graceleſs owlers gain. Swift.

We underſtand by ſome owlers, old people die in France. Tatler.

OWN. n. ſ. [aȝen, Saxon; eygen, Dutch.]

1. This is a word of no other uſe than as it is added to the poſſeſſive pronouns, my, thy, his, our, your, their. It ſeems to be a ſubſtantive; as, my own, my peculiar: but is, in reality, the participle paſſive of the verb owe, in the participle owen or own: my own; the thing owned by, or belonging to me.

Inachus in his cave alone,
Wept not another's loſſes, but his own. Dryden.

2. It is added generally by way of emphaſis or corroboration.

I yet never was forſworn,
Scarcely have coveted what was my own. Shakeſpeare.

Every nation made gods of their own, and put them in high places. 2 Kings, xvii. 29.

For my own ſhare one beauty I deſign,
Engage your honours that ſhe ſhall be mine. Dryden.

It is conceit rather than underſtanding, if it muſt be under the reſtraint of receiving and holding opinions by the authority of any thing but their own perceived evidence. Locke.

Will ſhe thy linen waſh, or hoſen darn,
And knit thee gloves made of her own ſpun yarn? Gay.

Paſſion and pride were to her ſoul unknown,
Convinc'd that virtue only is our own. Pope.

3. Sometimes it is added to note oppoſition or contradiſtinction; domeſtick; not foreign; mine, his, or yours; not another's.

Theſe toils abroad, theſe tumults with his own,
Fell in the revolution of one year. Daniel.

There's nothing ſillier than a crafty knave outwitted, and beaten at his own play. L'Eſtrange.

To Own. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To acknowledge; to avow for one's own.

When you come, find me out,
And own me for your ſon. Dryden's Cleomenes.

2. To poſſeſs; to claim; to hold by right.

Tell me, ye Trojans, for that name you own;
Nor is your courſe upon our coaſts unknown. Dryden.

Others on earth o'er human race preſide,
Of theſe the chief, the care of nations own,
And guard with arms divine the Britiſh throne. Pope.

3. To avow.

Nor hath it been thus only amongſt the more civilized nations; but the barbarous Indians likewiſe have owned that tradition. Wilkins.

I'll venture out alone,
Since you, fair princeſs, my protection own. Dryden.

4. To confeſs; not to deny.

Make this truth ſo evident, that thoſe who are unwilling to own it may yet be aſhamed to deny it. Tillotſon.

Others will own their weakneſs of underſtanding. Locke.

It muſt be owned, that, generally ſpeaking, good parents are never more fond of their daughters, than when they ſee them too fond of themſelves. Law.

O'wnership. n. ſ. [from owner.] Property; rightful poſſeſſion.

In a real action, the proximate cauſe is the property or ownerſhip of the thing in controverſy. Ayliffe's Parergon.

O'wner. n. ſ. [from own.] One to whom any thing belongs; maſter; rightful poſſeſſor.

A bark
Stays but till her owner comes aboard. Shakeſpeare.

It is not enough to break into my garden,
Climbing my walls in ſpight of me the owner,
But thou wilt brave me. Shakeſpeare.

Here ſhew favour, becauſe it happeneth that the owner hath incurred the forfeiture of eight years profit of his lands, before he cometh to the knowledge of the proceſs againſt him. Bacon.

They intend advantage of my labours,
With no ſmall profit daily to my owners. Milton.

Theſe wait the owners laſt deſpair,
And what's permitted to the flames invade. Dryden.

A freehold, though but in ice and ſnow, will make the owner pleaſed in the poſſeſſion, and ſtout in the defence of it. Addiſon.

That ſmall muſcle draws the noſe upwards, when it expreſſes the contempt which the owner of it has upon ſeeing any thing he does not like. Addiſon's Spectator.

Victory hath not made us inſolent, nor have we taken advantage to gain any thing beyond the honour of reſtoring every one's right to their juſt owners. Atterbury.

What is this wit, which muſt our cares employ?
The owner's wife, that other men enjoy. Pope.

Owre. n. ſ. [urus jubatus, Lat.] A beaſt. Ainſw.

Ox. n. ſ. plur. Oxen. [oxa, Saxon; oxe, Daniſh.]

1. The general name for black cattle.

The black ox hath not trod on his foot. Camden.

Sheep run not half ſo tim'rous from the wolf,
Or horſe or oxen from the leopard,
As you fly from your oft-ſubdued ſlaves. Shakeſpeare.

I ſaw the river Clitumnus, celebrated by the poets for making cattle white that drink of it. The inhabitants of that country have ſtill the ſame opinion, and have a great many oxen of a whitiſh colour to confirm them in it. Addiſon.

2. A caſtrated bull.

The horns of oxen and cows are larger than the bulls; which is cauſed by abundance of moiſture. Bacon.

Although there be naturally more males than females, yet artificially, that is, by making geldings, oxen, and weathers, there are fewer. Graunt.

The field is ſpacious I deſign to ſow,
With oxen far unfit to draw the plough. Dryden.

The frowning bull
And ox half-rais'd. Thomſon's Summer.

Oxba'ne. n. ſ. [buphonos.] A plant. Ainſworth.

Oxsta'll. n. ſ. [ox and ſtall.] A ſtand for oxen.

O'xtongue. n. ſ. [bugloſſa.] A plant. Ainſworth.

O'xycrate. n. ſ. [ὀξύκρατον, oxycrat, French; ὀξὺς and κεράω.] A mixture of water and vinegar.

Apply a mixture of the ſame powder, with a compreſs preſt out of oxycrate, and a ſuitable bandage. Wiſeman.

O'xymel. n. ſ. [ὀξύμελι, ὀξὺς, and μέλι.] A mixture of vinegar and honey.

In fevers, the aliments preſcribed by Hippocrates, were ptiſans and decoctions of ſome vegetables, with oxymel or the mixture of honey and vinegar. Arbuthnot.

Oxymo'ron. n. ſ. [ὀξύμωρον.] A rhetorical figure, in which an epithet of a quite contrary ſignification is added to any word.

Oxy'rrhodine. n. ſ. [ὀξυῤῥόδινον, ὀξυς, and ῥόδον.] A mixture of two parts of oil of roſes with one of vinegar of roſes.

The ſpirits, opiates, and cool things, readily compoſe oxyrrhodines. Floyer on the Humours.

O'yer. n. ſ. [oyer, old French, to hear.] A court of oyer and terminer, is a judicature where cauſes are heard and determined.

Oye's. [oyez, hear ye, French.] Is the introduction to any proclamation or advertiſement given by the publick criers both in England and Scotland. It is thrice repeated.

Fairies, black, grey, green, and white,
Attend your office and your quality.
Crier hobgoblin make the fairy O yes. Shakeſpeare.

O yes! if any happy eye
This roving wanton ſhall deſcry;
Let the finder ſurely know
Mine is the wag. Craſhaw.

Oy'lethole. n. ſ. See Eylet. [It may be written oylet, from oeillet, French; but eylet ſeems better.]

Diſtinguiſh'd ſlaſhes deck the great,
As each excels in birth or ſtate;
His oyletholes are more and ampler,
The king's own body was a ſamplar. Prior.

O'yster. n. ſ. [oeſter, Dutch; huitre, French.] A bivalve teſtaceous fiſh.

I will not lend thee a penny.—
—Why then the world's mine oyſter, which I with ſword will open. Shakeſpeare's Merry Wives of Windſor.

Rich honeſty dwells like your miſer, ſir, in a poor houſe; as your pearl in your foul oyſter. Shakeſpeare.

Another maſs held a kind of oyſter ſhell, and other bivalves. Woodw.

There may be many ranks of beings in the inviſible world as ſuperior to us, as we are ſuperior to all the ranks of being in this viſible world; though we deſcend below the oyſter to the leaſt animated atoms diſcovered by microſcopes. Watts.

Where oyſter tubs in rows
Are rang'd beſide the poſts, there ſtay thy haſte. Gay.

O'ysterwench. }
O'ysterwoman. } n. ſ. [oyſter and wench, or woman.] A woman whoſe buſineſs is to ſell oyſters. Proverbially, a low woman.

Its pallid bloom ſick-ſmelling hen-bane ſhow'd. Harte.

PALM. n. ſ. [palma, Latin; palmier, French.]

1. A tree of great variety of ſpecies; of which the branches were worn in token of victory: it therefore implies ſuperiority.

There are twenty-one ſpecies of this tree, of which the moſt remarkable are, the greater palm or date-tree. The dwarf palm grows in Spain, Portugal, and Italy, from whence the leaves are ſent hither and made into flag-brooms. The oily palm is a native of Guinea and Cape Verd iſland, but has been tranſplanted to Jamaica and Barbadoes. It grows as high as the main maſt of a ſhip. Miller.

Get the ſtart of the majeſtick world,
And bear the palm alone. Shakeſpeare's Julius Cæſar.

Nothing better proveth the excellency of this ſoil, than the abundant growing of the palm-trees without labour of man. This tree alone giveth unto man whatſoever his life beggeth at nature's hand. Raleigh.

Above others who carry away the palm for excellence, is Maurice Landgrave of Heſs. Peacham of Muſick.

Fruits of palm-tree, pleaſanteſt to thirſt
And hunger both. Milton.
Thou youngeſt virgin, daughter of the ſkies,
Whoſe palms new pluck'd from Paradiſe,
With ſpreading branches more ſublimely riſe. Dryden.

2. Victory; triumph. [palme, French.]

Namur ſubdu'd is England's palm alone;
The reſt beſieg'd, but we conſtrain'd the town. Dryden.

3. The hand ſpread out; the inner part of the hand. [palma, Latin.]

By this virgin palm now kiſſing thine,
I will be thine. Shakeſpeare.

Drinks of extreme thin parts fretting, put upon the back of your hand, will, with a little ſtay, paſs through to the palm, and yet taſte mild to the mouth. Bacon.

Seeking my ſucceſs in love to know,
I try'd th' infallible prophetick way,
A poppy-leaf upon my palm to lay. Dryden.

4. A hand, or meaſure of length, compriſing three inches. [palme, French.]

The length of a foot is a ſixth part of the ſtature; a ſpan one eighth of it; a palm or hand's breadth one twenty-fourth; a thumb's breadth or inch one ſeventy ſecond; a foreſinger's breadth one ninety-ſixth. Holder on Time.

Henry VIII. of England, Francis I. of France, and Charles V. emperor, were ſo provident, as ſcarce a palm of ground could be gotten by either, but that the other two would ſet the balance of Europe upright again. Bacon.

The ſame hand into a fiſt may cloſe,
Which inſtantly a palm expanded ſhows. Denham.

To PALM. v. a. [from the noun.]

PA´LMISTRY. n. ſ. [palma, Latin.]

1. The cheat of foretelling fortune by the lines of the palm.

We ſhall not query what truth is in palmiſtry, or divination from lines of our hands of high denomination. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

Here while his canting drone-pipe ſcan'd
The myſtick figures of her hand,
He tipples palmiſtry, and dines
On all her fortune-telling lines. Cleaveland.
With the fond maids in palmiſtry he deals;
They tell the ſecret firſt which he reveals. Prior.

2. Addiſon uſes it humorouſly for the action of the hand.

Going to relieve a common beggar, he found his pocket was picked; that being a kind of palmiſtry at which this vermin are very dextrous. Addiſon's Spectator.

PA´LMY. adj. [from palm.] Bearing palms.

In the moſt high and palmy ſtate of Rome,
A little ere the mightieſt Julius fell,
The graves ſtood tenantleſs. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.
She paſs'd the region which Panchea join'd,
And flying, left the palmy plains behind. Dryden.

PALPABI´LITY. n. ſ. [from palpable.] Quality of being perceivable to the touch.

He firſt found out palpability of colours; and by the delicacy of his touch, could diſtinguiſh the different vibrations of the heterogeneous rays of light. Mart. Scriblerus.

PA´LPABLE. adj. [palpable, French; palpor, Latin.]

1. Perceptible by the touch.

Art thou but
A dagger of the mind, a falſe creation?
I ſee thee yet in form as palpable,
As this which now I draw. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.
Darkneſs muſt overſhadow all his bounds,
Palpable darkneſs! and blot out three days. Milton.

2. Groſs; coarſe; eaſily detected.

That groſſer kind of heatheniſh idolatry, whereby they worſhipped the very works of their own hands, was an abſurdity to reaſon ſo palpable, that the prophet David comparing idols and idolaters together, maketh almoſt no odds between them. Hooker.

They grant we err not in palpable manner, we are not openly and notoriouſly impious. Hooker.

He muſt not think to ſhelter himſelf from ſo palpable an abſurdity, by this impertinent diſtinction. Tillotſon.

Having no ſurer guide, it was no wonder that they fell into groſs and palpable miſtakes. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

3. Plain; eaſily perceptible.

That they all have ſo teſtified, I ſee not how we ſhould poſſibly wiſh a proof more palpable, than this manifeſtly received and every where continued cuſtom of reading them publickly. Hooker.

They would no longer be content with the inviſible monarchy of God, and God diſmiſſed them to the palpable dominion of Saul. Holyday.

Since there is ſo much diſſimilitude between cauſe and effect in the more palpable phænomena, we can expect no leſs between them and their inviſible efficients. Glanville.

PA´LPABLENESS. n. ſ. [from palpable.] Quality of being palpable; plainneſs; groſneſs.

PA´LPABLY. adv. [from palpable.]

1. In ſuch a manner as to be perceived by the touch.

2. Groſly; plainly.

Prime of the flock and choiceſt of the ſtall. Pope.

PA´MPHLET. n. ſ. [par un filet, Fr. Whence this word is written anciently, and by Caxton, paunflet.] A ſmall book; properly a book ſold unbound, and only ſtitched.

Com'ſt thou with deep premeditated lines,
With written pamphlets ſtudiouſly devis'd? Shakeſpeare.

I put forth a ſlight pamphlet about the elements of architecture. Wotton.

Since I have been reading many Engliſh pamphlets and tractates of the ſabbath I can hardly find any treatiſe wherein the uſe of the common ſervice by the miniſter, and the due frequenting thereof by the people, is once named among the duties or offices of ſanctifying the Lord's-day. White.

He could not, without ſome tax upon himſelf and his miniſters for the not executing the laws, look upon the bold licence of ſome in printing pamphlets. Clarendon.

As when ſome writer in a publick cauſe,
His pen, to ſave a ſinking nation, draws,
While all is calm, his arguments prevail,
Till pow'r diſcharging all her ſtormy bags,
Flutters the feeble pamphlet into rags. Swift.

To PA´MPHLET. v. n. [from the noun.] To write ſmall books.

I put pen to paper, and ſomething I have done, though in a poor pamphleting way. Howel.

PAMPHLETEE´R. n. ſ. [from pamphlet.] A ſcribbler of ſmall books.

The ſquibs are thoſe who in the common phraſe are called libellers, lampooners, and pamphleteers. Tatler.

All parallels exactly run. Swift's Miſcellany.

5. Compariſon made.

The parallel holds in the gainleſsneſs, as well as laboriouſneſs of the work. Decay of Piety.

A reader cannot be more rationally entertained, than by comparing and drawing a parallel between his own private character, and that of other perſons. Addiſon.

6. Any thing reſembling another.

Thou ungrateful brute, if thou wouldſt find thy parallel, go to hell, which is both the region and the emblem of ingratitude. South.

For works like theſe, let deathleſs journals tell,
None but thyſelf can be thy parallel. Pope.

To Pa´rallel. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To place, ſo as always to keep the ſame direction with another line.

The Azores having a middle ſituation between theſe continents and that vaſt tract of America, the needle ſeemeth equally diſtracted by both, and diverting unto neither, doth parallel and place itſelf upon the true meridian. Brown.

2. To keep in the ſame direction; to level.

The loyal ſufferers abroad became ſubjected to the worſt effect of baniſhment, and even there expelled and driven from their flights: ſo paralleling in their exigencies the moſt immediate objects of that monſter's fury. Fell.

His life is parallel'd
Ev'n with the ſtroke and line of his great juſtice. Shakeſpeare.

3. To correſpond to.

That he ſtretched out the north over the empty places, ſeems to parallel the expreſſion of David, he ſtretched out the earth upon the waters. Burnet.

4. To be equal to; to reſemble through many particulars.

In the fire, the deſtruction was ſo ſwift, ſudden, vaſt, and miſerable, as nothing can parallel in ſtory. Dryden.

5. To compare.

I parallel'd more than once, our idea of ſubſtance, with the Indian philoſopher's he-knew-not-what, which ſupported the tortoiſe. Locke.

Paralle´lism. n. ſ. [paralleliſme, French; from parallel.] State of being parallel.

The paralleliſm and due proportionated inclination of the axis of the earth. More's Divine Dialogues.

Speaking of the paralleliſm of the axis of the earth, I demand, whether it be better to have the axis of the earth ſteady and perpetually parallel to itſelf, or to have it careleſsly tumble this way and that way. Ray on the Creation.

PARALLE´LOGRAM. n. ſ. [ϖαράλληλ☉ and γράμμα; parallelograme, French.] In geometry, a right lined quadrilateral figure, whoſe oppoſite ſides are parallel and equal. Harris.

The experiment we made in a loadſtone of a parallelogram, or long figure, wherein only inverting the extremes, as it came out of the fire, we altered the poles. Brown.

We may have a clear idea of the area of a parallelogram, without knowing what relation it bears to the area of a triangle. Watts.

Parallelogra´mical. adj. [from parallelogram.] Having the properties of a parallelogram.

Parallelo´piped. n. ſ. [from parallelopipede, Fr.] A ſolid figure contained under ſix parallelograms, the oppoſites of which are equal and parallel; or it is a priſm, whoſe baſe is a parallelogram: it is always triple to a pyramid of the ſame baſe and height. Harris.

Two priſms alike in ſhape I tied ſo, that their axes and oppoſite ſides being parallel, they compoſed a parallelopiped. Newton.

Cryſtals that hold lead are yellowiſh, and of a cubic or parallelopiped figure. Woodward.

Pa´ralogism. n. ſ. [παραλόγισμος; paralogiſme, Fr.] A falſe argument.

That becauſe they have not a bladder of gall, like thoſe we obſerve in others, they have no gall at all, is a paralogiſm not admittible, a fallacy that dwells not in a cloud, and needs not the ſun to ſcatter it. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Modern writers, making the drachma leſs than the denarius, others equal, have been deceived by a double paralogiſm, in ſtanding too nicely upon the bare words of the ancients, without examining the things. Arbuthnot.

If a ſyllogiſm agree with the rules given for the conſtruction of it, it is called a true argument: if it diſagree with theſe rules, it is a paralogiſm, or falſe argument. Watts.

Pa´ralogy. n. ſ. Falſe reaſoning.

That Methuſelah was the longeſt liver of all the poſterity of Adam, we quietly believe; but that he muſt needs be ſo, is perhaps below paralogy to deny. Brown.

PA´RALYSIS. [παράλυσις; paralyſie, Fr.] A palſy.

Paraly´tical. } Paraly´tick. } adj. [from paralyſis; paralytique, French.] Palſied; inclined to palſy.

Nought ſhall it profit, that the charming fair,
Angelic, ſofteſt work of heav'n, draws near,
To the cold ſhaking paralytick hand,
Senſeleſs of beauty. Prior.

If a nerve be cut, or ſtreightly bound, that goes to any muſcle, that muſcle ſhall immediately loſe its motion: which is the caſe of paralyticks. Derham.

The difficulties of breathing and ſwallowing, without any tumour after long diſeaſes, proceed commonly from a reſolution or paralytical diſpoſition of the parts. Arbuthnot.

Para´meter. n. ſ. The latus rectum of a parabola, is a third proportional to the abſciſſa and any ordinate; ſo that the ſquare of the ordinate is always equal to the rectangle under the parameter and abſciſſa: but, in the ellipſis and hyperbola, it has a different proportion. Harris.

Paramo´unt. adj. [per and mount.]

1. Superiour; having the higheſt juriſdiction: as, lord paramount, the chief of the ſeigniory: with to.

PA´RAPHRASE. n. ſ. [παράφρασις; paraphraſe, Fr.] A looſe interpretation; an explanation in many words.

All the laws of nations were but a paraphraſe upon this ſtanding rectitude of nature, that was ready to enlarge itſelf into ſuitable determinations, upon all emergent objects and occaſions. South.

In paraphraſe, or tranſlation with latitude, the author's words are not ſo ſtrictly followed as his ſenſe, and that too amplified, but not altered: ſuch is Mr. Waller's tranſlation of Virgil's fourth Æneid. Dryden.

To PA´RAPHRASE. v. a. [paraphraſer, French; παραφράζω.] To interpret with laxity of expreſſion; to tranſlate looſely.

We are put to conſtrue and paraphraſe our own words, to free ourſelves from the ignorance and malice of our adverſaries. Stillingfl.

What needs he paraphraſe on what we mean?
We were at worſt but wanton; he's obſcene. Dryden.

Where tranſlation is impracticable, they may paraphraſe.—But it is intolerable, that, under a pretence of paraphraſing and tranſlating, a way ſhould be ſuffered of treating authors to a manifeſt diſadvantage. Felton on the Claſſicks.

PA´RAPHRAST. n. ſ. [paraphraſte, French; παραφραστής.] A lax interpreter; one who explains in many words.

The fitteſt for publick audience are ſuch, as following a middle courſe between the rigor of literal tranſlators and the liberty of paraphraſts, do, with great ſhortneſs and plainneſs, deliver the meaning. Hooker.

The Chaldean paraphraſt renders Gerah by Meath. Arbuthnot.

PARAPHRA´STICAL. } adj. [from paraphraſe.] Lax
PARAPHRA´STICK. } in interpretation; not literal; not verbal.

PARAPHRENI´TIS. n. ſ. [παρα and φρενῖτις; paraphreneſie, French.]

Paraphrenitis is an inflammation of the diaphragm. The ſymptoms are a violent fever, a moſt exquiſite pain increaſed upon inſpiration, by which it is diſtinguiſhed from a pleuriſy, in which the greateſt pain is in expiration. Arbuthnot.

PARAQUE´TO. n. ſ. A little parrot.

PA´RASANG. n. ſ. [paraſanga.] A Perſian meaſure of length.

Since the mind is not able to frame an idea of any ſpace without parts, inſtead thereof it makes uſe of the common meaſures, which, by familiar uſe, in each country, have imprinted themſelves on the memory; as inches and feet, or cubits and paraſangs. Locke.

PA´RASITE. n. ſ. [paraſite, French; paraſita, Lat.] One that frequents rich tables, and earns his welcome by flattery.

He is a flatterer,
A paraſite, a keeper back of death,
Who gently would diſſolve the bands of life,
Which falſe hopes linger. Shakeſpeare.

Moſt ſmiling, ſmooth, deteſted paraſites,
Courteous deſtroyers, affable wolves, meek bears,
You fools of fortune. Shakeſpeare.

Diogenes, when mice came about him, as he was eating, ſaid, I ſee that even Diogenes nouriſheth paraſites. Bacon.

Thou, with trembling fear,
Or like a fawning paraſite, obey'd;
Then to thyſelf aſcrib'ſt the truth foretold. Milton.

The people ſweat not for their king's delight,
T' enrich a pimp, or raiſe a paraſite. Dryden.

PARASI´TICAL. } adj. [paraſitique, French; from pa-
PARASI´TICK. } raſite.] Flattering; wheedling.

1. A ſmall bundle.

2. A part of the whole; part taken ſeparately.

Women, Silvius, had they mark'd him
In parcels, as I did, would have gone near
To fall in love with him. Shakeſpeare.

I drew from her a prayer of earneſt heart,
That I would all my pilgrimage delate;
Whereof by parcels ſhe had ſomething heard,
But not diſtinctively. Shakeſpeare's Othello.

An inventory thus importing,
The ſeveral parcels of his plate, his treaſure,
Rich ſtuffs and ornaments of houſhold. Shakeſpeare.

With what face could ſuch a great man have begged ſuch a parcel of the crown lands, one a vaſt ſum of money, another the forfeited eſtate? Davenant.

I have known penſions given to particular perſons, any one of which, if divided into ſmaller parcels, and diſtributed to thoſe who diſtinguiſh themſelves by wit or learning, would anſwer the end. Swift.

The ſame experiments ſucceed on two parcels of the white of an egg, only it grows ſomewhat thicker upon mixing with an acid. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. A quantity or maſs.

What can be rationally conceived in ſo tranſparent a ſubſtance as water for the production of theſe colours, beſides the various ſizes of its fluid and globular parcels? Newton.

This youthful parcel
Of noble batchelors ſtand at my beſtowing. Shakeſpeare.

5. Any number or quantity: in contempt.

They came to this concluſion; that unleſs they could, by a parcel of fair words and pretences, engage them into a confederacy, there was no good to be done. L'Eſtrange.

To PA´RCEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To divide into portions.

If they allot and parcel out ſeveral perfections to ſeveral deities, do they not, by this, aſſert contradictions, making deity only to ſuch a meaſure perfect? whereas a deity implies perfection beyond all meaſure. South.

Thoſe ghoſtly kings would parcel out my pow'r,
And all the fatneſs of my land devour. Dryden.

2. To make up into a maſs.

What a wounding ſhame, that mine own ſervant ſhould parcel the ſum of my diſgraces by addition of his envy! Shakeſpeare.

PA´RCENER. n. ſ. [In common law.] When one dies poſſeſſed of an eſtate, and having iſſue only daughters, or his ſiſters be his heirs; ſo that the lands deſcend to thoſe daughters or ſiſters: theſe are called parceners, and are but as one heir. Dict.

PA´RCENARY. n. ſ. [from parſonier, Fr.] A holding or occupying of land by more perſons pro indiviſo, or by joint tenants, otherwiſe called coparceners: for if they refuſe to divide their common inheritance, and chuſe rather to hold it jointly, they are ſaid to hold in parcinarie. Cowel.

To PARCH. v. a. [from περικαίειν, ſays Junius; from percoquo, ſays Skinner; neither of them ſeem ſatisfied with their conjecture: perhaps from peruſtus, burnt, to peruſt, to parch; perhaps from parchment, the effect of fire upon parchment being almoſt proverbial.] To burn ſlightly and ſuperficially; to ſcorch; to dry up.

Hath thy fiery heart ſo parcht thine entrails,
That not a tear can fall? Shakeſpeare.

Did he ſo often lodge in open field
In winter's cold, and ſummer's parching heat,
To conquer France? Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

Torrid heat,
And vapours as the Libyan air aduſt,
Began to parch that temperate clime. Milton.

I'm ſtupify'd with ſorrow, paſt relief
Of tears; parch'd up and wither'd with my grief. Dryden.

Without this circular motion of our earth, one hemiſphere would be condemned to perpetual cold and darkneſs, the other continually roaſted and parched by the ſun beams. Ray.

The Syrian ſtar
With his ſultry breath infects the ſky;
The ground below is parch'd, the heav'ns above us fry. Dryd.

Full fifty years
I have endur'd the biting winter's blaſt,
And the ſeverer heats of parching ſummer. Rowe.

The ſkin grows parched and dry, and the whole body lean and meagre. Blackmore.

A man diſtreſſed with thirſt in the parched places of the wilderneſs, ſearches every pit, but finds no water. Rogers.

To PARCH. v. n. To be ſcorched.

We were better parch in Africk ſun,
Than in the pride and ſalt ſcorn of his eyes. Shakeſpeare.

If to prevent the acroſpiring, it be thrown thin, many corns will dry and parch into barley. Mortimer.

PA´RCHMENT. n. ſ. [parchemin, French; pergamena, Latin.] Skins dreſſed for the writer. Among traders, the ſkins of ſheep are called parchment, thoſe of calves vellum.

Is not this a lamentable thing, that the ſkin of an innocent lamb ſhould be made parchment; that parchment, being ſcribbled o'er, ſhould undo a man? Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.

In the coffin, that had the books, they were found as freſh as if newly written, being written in parchment, and covered with watch candles of wax. Bacon.

Like flying ſhades before the clouds we ſhew,
We ſhrink like parchment in conſuming flame. Dryden.

PA´RCHMENT-MAKER. n. ſ. [parchment and maker.] He who dreſſes parchment.

Sir, pardon me, it is a letter from my brother. Shakeſpeare.

PA´RDON. n. ſ. [pardon, French; from the verb.]

1. Forgiveneſs of an offender.

2. Forgiveneſs of a crime.

He that pleaſeth great men, ſhall get pardon for iniquity. Ecclus. xx. 27.

A ſlight pamphlet, about the elements of architecture, hath been entertained with ſome pardon among my friends. Wotton.

But infinite in pardon is my judge. Milton.

What better can we do than proſtrate fall
Before him reverent, and there confeſs
Humbly our faults, and pardon beg, with tears
Wat'ring the ground? Milton.

There might you ſee
Indulgencies, diſpenſes, pardons, bulls,
The ſport of winds. Milton.

3. Remiſſion of penalty.

4. Forgiveneſs received.

A man may be ſafe as to his condition, but, in the mean time, dark and doubtful as to his apprehenſions: ſecure in his pardon, but miſerable in the ignorance of it; and ſo paſſing all his days in the diſconſolate, uneaſy viciſſitudes of hopes and fears, at length go out of the world, not knowing whither he goes. South.

5. Warrant of forgiveneſs, or exemption from puniſhment.

The battle done, and they within our power,
Shall never ſee his pardon. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

PA´RDONABLE. adj. [pardonable, French; from pardon.] Venial; excuſable.

That which we do being evil, is notwithſtanding by ſo much more pardonable, by how much the exigencies of ſo doing, or the difficulty of doing otherwiſe, is greater, unleſs this neceſſity or difficulty have originally riſen from ourſelves. Hooker.

A blind man ſitting in the chimney corner is pardonable enough, but ſitting at the helm, he is intolerable. South.

What Engliſh readers, unacquainted with Greek or Latin, will believe me, when we confeſs we derive all that is pardonable in us from ancient fountains? Dryden.

PA´RDONABLENESS. n. ſ. [from pardonable.] Venialneſs; ſuſceptibility of pardon.

Saint John's word is, all ſin is tranſgreſſion of the law; Saint Paul's, the wages of ſin is death: put theſe two together, and this conceit of the natural pardonableneſs of ſin vaniſhes away. Hall.

PA´RDONABLY. adv. [from pardonable.] Venially; excuſably.

I may judge when I write more or leſs pardonably. Dryden.

PA´RDONER. n. ſ. [from pardon.]

This is his pardon, purchas'd by ſuch ſin,
For which the pardoner himſelf is in. Shakeſpeare.

2. One of the fellows that carried about the pope's indulgencies, and ſold them to ſuch as would buy them, againſt whom Luther incenſed the people of Germany. Cowel.

To PARE. v. a. [This word is reaſonably deduced by Skinner from the French phraſe, parer les ongles, to dreſs the horſes hoofs when they are ſhaved by the farrier: thus we firſt ſaid, pare your nails; and from thence transferred the word to general uſe.] To cut off extremities of the ſurface; to cut away by little and little; to diminiſh. If pare be uſed before the thing diminiſhed, it is followed immediately by its accuſative; if it precedes the thing taken away, or agrees in the paſſive voice with the thing taken away, as a nominative, it then requires a particle: as, away, off.

The creed of Athanaſius, and that ſacred hymn of glory, than which nothing doth ſound more heavenly in the ears of faithful men, are now reckoned as ſuperfluities, which we muſt in any caſe pare away, leſt we cloy God with too much ſervice. Hooker.

I have not alone
Imploy'd you where high profits might come home;
But par'd my preſent havings to beſtow
My bounties upon you. Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

I am a man, whom fortune hath cruelly ſcratch'd.
—'Tis too late to pare her nails now. Shakeſpeare.

The lion, mov'd with pity, did endure
To have his princely paws all par'd away. Shakeſpeare.

The king began to pare a little the privilege of clergy, ordaining that clerks convict ſhould be burned in the hand. Bacon's Henry VII.

Pick out of tales the mirth, but not the ſin,
He pares his apple, that will cleanly feed. Herbert.

Whoever will partake of God's ſecrets, muſt firſt look into his own, he muſt pare off whatſoever is amiſs, and not without holineſs approach to the holieſt of all holies. Taylor.

All the mountains were pared off the earth, and the ſurface of it lay even, or in an equal convexity every where with the ſurface of the ſea. Burnet.

The moſt poetical parts, which are deſcription and images, were to be pared away, when the body was ſwollen into too large a bulk for the repreſentation of the ſtage. Dryden.

The ſword, as it was juſtly drawn by us, ſo can it ſcarce ſafely be ſheathed, till the power of the great troubler of our peace be ſo far pared and reduced, as that we may be under no apprehenſions. Atterbury.

'Twere well if ſhe would pare her nails. Pope.

PARE'NTHESIS. n. ſ. [parentheſe, French; παρα, ἐν, and τίθημι.] A ſentence ſo included in another ſentence, as that it may be taken out, without injuring the ſenſe of that which incloſes it: being commonly marked thus, ( ).

In vain is my perſon excepted by a parentheſis of words, when ſo many are armed againſt me with ſwords. King Charles.

In his Indian relations, are contained ſtrange and incredible accounts; he is ſeldom mentioned, without a derogatory parentheſis, in any author. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Thou ſhalt be ſeen,
Tho' with ſome ſhort parentheſis between,
High on the throne of wit. Dryden.

Don't ſuffer every occaſional thought to carry you away into a long parentheſis, and thus ſtretch out your diſcourſe, and divert you from the point in hand. Watts's Logick.

Parenthe'tical. adj. [from parentheſis.] Pertaining to a parentheſis.

Pa'rer. n. ſ. [from pare.] An inſtrument to cut away the ſurface.

PA'RGET. n. ſ. Plaſter laid upon roofs of rooms.

Gold was the parget, and the cieling bright
Did ſhine all ſcaly with great plates of gold;
The floor with jaſp and emerald was dight. Spenſer.

Of Engliſh talc, the coarſer ſort is called plaſter or parget: the finer, ſpaad. Woodward.

To Pa'rget. v. a. [from the noun.] To plaſter; to cover with plaſter.

There are not more arts of diſguiſing our corporeal blemiſhes than our moral; and yet, while we thus paint and parget our own deformities, we cannot allow any the leaſt imperfection of another's to remain undetected. Government of the Tongue.

Pa'rgeter. n. ſ. [from parget.] A plaſterer.

Parhe'lion. n. ſ. [παρα and ἥλιος.] A mock ſun.

To neglect that ſupreme reſplendency, that ſhines in God, for thoſe dim repreſentations of it, that we ſo doat on in the creature, is as abſurd, as it were for a Perſian to offer his ſacrifice to a parhelion, inſtead of adoring the ſun. Boyle.

Pari'etal. adj. [from paries, Latin.] Conſtituting the ſides or walls.

The lower part of the parietal and upper part of the temporal bones were fractured. Sharp's Surgery.

Pari'etary. n. ſ. [parietaire, French.] An herb. Ainſworth.

Pa'ring. n. ſ. [from pare.] That which is pared off any thing; the rind.

Virginity breeds mites, much like a cheeſe; and conſumes itſelf to the very paring. Shakeſpeare.

He eat himſelf the rind and paring. Pope.

In May, after rain, pare off the ſurface of the earth, and with the parings raiſe your hills high, and enlarge their breadth. Mortimer.

Pa'ris. n. ſ. [aconitum.] An herb. Ainſworth.

PA'RISH. n. ſ. [parochia, low Latin; paroiſſe, Fren. of the Greek παροικία, i. e. accolarum conventus, accolatus, ſacra vicinia.] The particular charge of a ſecular prieſt. Every church is either cathedral, conventual, or parochial: cathedral is that where there is a biſhop ſeated, ſo called a cathedra: conventual conſiſts of regular clerks, profeſſing ſome order of religion, or of a dean and chapter, or other college of ſpiritual men: parochial is that which is inſtituted for ſaying divine ſervice, and adminiſtring the holy ſacraments to the people, dwelling within a certain compaſs of ground near unto it. Our realm was firſt divided into pariſhes by Honorius, archbiſhop of Canterbury, in the year of our Lord 636. Cowel.

Dametas came piping and dancing, the merrieſt man in a pariſh. Sidney.

By the Catholick church is meant no more than the common church, into which all ſuch perſons as belonged to that pariſh, in which it was built, were wont to congregate. Pearſon.

The tythes, his pariſh freely paid, he took;
But never ſu'd, or curs'd with bell or book. Dryden.

Pa'rish. adj.

1. Belonging to the pariſh; having the care of the pariſh.

A pariſh prieſt was of the pilgrim train,
An awful, reverend, and religious man. Dryden.

Not pariſh clerk, who calls the pſalms ſo clear. Gay.

The office of the church is performed by the pariſh prieſt, at the time of his interment. Ayliffe.

A man, after his natural death, was not capable of the leaſt pariſh office. Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

The pariſh allowance to poor people, is very ſeldom a comfortable maintenance. Law.

2. Maintained by the pariſh.

The ghoſt and the pariſh girl are entire new characters. Gay.

Pari'shioner. n. ſ. [paroiſſien, French; from pariſh.] One that belongs to the pariſh.

I praiſe the Lord for you, and ſo may my pariſhioners; for their ſons are well tutored by you. Shakeſpeare.

Hail biſhop Valentine, whoſe day this is,
All the air is thy dioceſe;
And all the chirping choriſters
And other birds are thy pariſhioners. Donne.

In the greater out-pariſhes, many of the pariſhioners, through neglect, do periſh. Graunt.

I have depoſited thirty marks, to be diſtributed among the poor pariſhioners. Addiſon's Spectator.

Pa'ritor. n. ſ. [for apparitor.] A beadle; a ſummoner of the courts of civil law.

You ſhall be ſummoned by an hoſt of paritours; you ſhall be ſentenced in the ſpiritual court. Dryden.

Pa'rity. n. ſ. [parité, French; paritas, Lat.] Equality; reſemblance.

We may here juſtly tax the diſhoneſty and ſhamefulneſs of the mouths, who have upbraided us with the opinion of a certain ſtoical parity of ſins. Hall.

That Chriſt or his apoſtles ever commanded to ſet up ſuch a parity of preſbyters, and in ſuch a way as thoſe Scots endeavour, I think is not very diſputable. King Charles.

Survey the total ſet of animals, and we may, in their legs or organs of progreſſion, obſerve an equality of length and parity of numeration; not any to have an odd leg, or the movers of one ſide not exactly anſwered by the other. Brown.

Thoſe accidental occurrences, which excited Socrates to the diſcovery of ſuch an invention, might fall in with that man that is of a perfect parity with Socrates. Hale.

Their agreement, in eſſential characters, makes rather an identity than a parity. Glanville.

Women could not live in that parity and equality of expence with their huſbands, as now they do. Graunt.

By an exact parity of reaſon, we may argue, if a man has no ſenſe of thoſe kindneſſes that paſs upon him, from one like himſelf, whom he ſees and knows, how much leſs ſhall his heart be affected with the grateful ſenſe of his favours, whom he converſes with only by imperfect ſpeculations, by the diſcourſes of reaſon, or the diſcoveries of faith? South.

PARK. n. ſ. [peaɲɲuc, Saxon; parc, French.] A piece of ground incloſed and ſtored with wild beaſts of chaſe, which a man may have by preſcription or the king's grant. Manwood, in his foreſt-law, defines it thus: a park is a place for privilege for wild beaſts of venery, and alſo for other wild beaſts that are beaſts of the foreſt and of the chaſe: and thoſe wild beaſts are to have a firm peace and protection there, ſo that no man may hurt or chaſe them within the park, without licenſe of the owner: a park is of another nature, than either a chaſe or a warren; for a park muſt be incloſed, and may not lie open; if it does, it is a good cauſe of ſeizure into the king's hands: and the owner cannot have action againſt ſuch as hunt in his park, if it lies open. Cowel.

We have parks and incloſures of all ſorts of beaſts and birds, which we uſe not only for view or rareneſs, but likewiſe for diſſections and trials. Bacon.

To Park. v. a. [from the noun.] To incloſe as in a park.

How are we park'd, and bounded in a pale?
A little herd of England's tim'rous deer,
Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs. Shakeſpeare.

Pa'rker. n. ſ. [from park.] A park-keeper. Ainſw.

Pa'rkleaves. n. ſ. An herb. Ainſworth.

Parle. n. ſ. [from parler, French.] Converſation; talk; oral treaty; oral diſcuſſion of any thing.

Of all the gentlemen,
That every day with parle encounter me,
In thy opinion, which is worthieſt love? Shakeſpeare.

Our trumpet call'd you to this general parle. Shakeſpeare.

The biſhop, by a parle, is, with a ſhow
Of combination, cunningly betray'd. Daniel.

Why meet we thus, like wrangling advocates,
To urge the juſtice of our cauſe with words?
I hate this parle; 'tis tame: if we muſt meet,
Give me my arms. Rowe's Ambitious Step-mother.

To PA'RLEY. v. n. [from parler, French.] To treat by word of mouth; to talk; to diſcuſs any thing orally. It is much uſed in war for a meeting of enemies to talk.

A Turk deſired the captain to ſend ſome, with whom they might more conveniently parley. Knolles's Hiſtory.

He parleys with her a while, as imagining ſhe would adviſe him to proceed. Broome.

Pa'rley. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Oral treaty; talk; conference; diſcuſſion by word of mouth.

Seek rather by parley to recover them, than by the ſword. Sidney.

Well, by my will, we ſhall admit no parley:
A rotten caſe abides no handling. Shakeſpeare.

Summon a parley, we will talk with him. Shakeſpeare.

Let us reſolve never to have any parley with our luſts, but to make ſome conſiderable progreſs in our repentance. Calamy.

Parley and holding intelligence with guilt in the moſt trivial things, he pronounced as treaſon to ourſelves, as well as unto God. Fell.

No gentle means could be eſſay'd;
'Twas beyond parley when the ſiege was laid. Dryden.

Force never yet a generous heart did gain;
We yield on parley, but are ſtorm'd in vain. Dryden.

Yet when ſome better fated youth
Shall with his am'rous parley move thee,
Reflect one moment on his truth,
Who, dying thus, perſiſts to love thee. Prior.

PA'RLIAMENT. n. ſ. [parliamentum, low Latin; parlement, French.] In England, is the aſſembly of the king and three eſtates of the realm; namely, the lords ſpiritual, the lords temporal, and commons, for the debating of matters touching the commonwealth, eſpecially the making and correcting of laws; which aſſembly or court is, of all others, the higheſt, and of greateſt authority. Cowel.

The king is fled to London,
To call a preſent court of parliament. Shakeſpeare.

Far be the thought of this from Henry's heart,
To make a ſhambles of the parliament houſe. Shakeſpeare.

The true uſe of parliaments is very excellent; and be often called, and continued as long as is neceſſary. Bacon.

I thought the right way of parliaments the moſt ſafe for my crown, as beſt pleaſing to my people. King Charles.

Theſe are mob readers: if Virgil and Martial ſtood for parliament men, we know who would carry it. Dryden.

Parliame'ntary. adj. [from parliament.] Enacted by parliament; pertaining to parliament.

To the three firſt titles of the two houſes, or lines, and conqueſts were added two more; the authorities parliamentary and papal. Bacon.

Many things, that obtain as common law, had their original by parliamentary acts or conſtitutions, made in writings by the king, lords, and commons. Hale.

Credit to run ten millions in debt, without parliamentary ſecurity, I think to be dangerous and illegal. Swift.

Pa'rlour. n. ſ. [parloir, French; parlatorio, Italian.]

1. A room in monaſteries, where the religious meet and converſe.

2. A room in houſes on the firſt floor, elegantly furniſhed for reception or entertainment.

Can we judge it a thing ſeemly for a man to go about the building of an houſe to the God of heaven, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own uſe? Hooker.

Back again fair Alma led them right,
And ſoon into a goodly parlour brought. Spenſer.

It would be infinitely more ſhameful, in the dreſs of the kitchen, to receive the entertainments of the parlour. South.

Roof and ſides were like a parlour made
A ſoft receſs, and a cool ſummer ſhade. Dryden.

The firſt, forgive my verſe if too diffuſe,
Perform'd the kitchen's and the parlour's uſe;
The ſecond, better bolted and immur'd,
From wolves his out-door family ſecur'd. Harte.

PA'RLOUS. adj. [This might ſeem to come from parler, French, to ſpeak; but Junius derives it, I think rightly, from perilous, in which it anſwers to the Latin improbus.] Keen; ſprightly; waggiſh.

Midas durſt communicate
To none but to his wife his ears of ſtate;
One muſt be truſted, and he thought her fit,
As paſſing prudent, and a parlous wit. Dryden.

Pa'rlousness. n. ſ. [from parlous.] Quickneſs; keenneſs of temper.

Parma-citty. n. ſ. Corruptedly for ſperma ceti. Ainſworth.

Paro'chial. adj. [parochialis, from parochia, low Latin.] Belonging to a pariſh.

The married ſtate of parochial paſtors hath given them the opportunity of ſetting a more exact and univerſal pattern of holy living, to the people committed to their charge. Atterbury.

PA'RODY. n. ſ. [parodie, French; παρῳδία.] A kind of writing, in which the words of an author or his thoughts are taken, and by a ſlight change adapted to ſome new purpoſe.

The imitations of the ancients are added together with ſome of the parodies and alluſions to the moſt excellent of the moderns. Pope's Dunciad.

To Pa'rody. v. a. [parodier, French; from parody.] To copy by way of parody.

I have tranſlated, or rather parodied, a poem of Horace, in which I introduce you adviſing me. Pope.

Paro'nymous. adj. [παρώνυμος.] Reſembling another word.

Shew your critical learning in the etymology of terms, the ſynonimous and the paronymous or kindred names. Watts.

Paro'le. n. ſ. [parole, French.] Word given as an aſſurance; promiſe given by a priſoner not to go away.

Love's votaries enthral each other's ſoul,
Till both of them live but upon parole. Cleaveland.

Be very tender of your honour, and not fall in love; becauſe I have a ſcruple whether you can keep your parole, if you become a priſoner to the ladies. Swift.

Paronoma'sia. n. ſ. [παρωνομασία.] A rhetorical figure, in which, by the change of a letter or ſyllable, ſeveral things are alluded to. It is called in Latin, agnominatio. Dict.

Pa'roquet. n. ſ. [parroquet, or perroquet, French.] A ſmall ſpecies of parrot.

The great, red and blue, are parrots; the middlemoſt, called popinjays; and the leſſer, paroquets: in all above twenty ſorts. Grew.

I would not give my paroquet
For all the doves that ever flew. Prior.

Parony'chia. n. ſ. [παρωνυχία; paronychie, French.] A preternatural ſwelling or ſore under the root of the nail in one's finger: a felon; a whitlow. Dict.

Pa'rotid. adj. [parotide, French; παρωτὶς, παρὰ and ὦτα.] Salivary: ſo named becauſe near the ears.

Beaſts and birds, having one common uſe of ſpittle, are furniſhed with the parotid glands, which help to ſupply the mouth with it. Grew.

Pa'rotis. n. ſ. [παρωτίς.] A tumour in the glandules behind and about the ears, generally called the emunctories of the brain; though, indeed, they are the external fountains of the ſaliva of the mouth. Wiſeman.

Pa'roxysm. n. ſ. [παροξυσμὸς; paroxyſme, French.] A fit; periodical exacerbation of a diſeaſe.

I fancied to myſelf a kind of eaſe, in the change of the paroxyſm. Dryden.

Amorous girls, through the fury of an hyſterick paroxyſm, are caſt into a trance for an hour. Harvey.

The greater diſtance of time there is between the paroxyſms, the fever is leſs dangerous, but more obſtinate. Arbuthnot.

Pa'rricide. n. ſ. [parricide, French; parricida, Latin.]

1. One who deſtroys his father.

I told him the revenging gods
'Gainſt parricides did all their thunder bend;
Spoke with how manifold and ſtrong a bond
The child was bound to th' father. Shakeſpeare.

2. One who deſtroys or invades any to whom he owes particular reverence, as his country or patron.

3. [Parricide, French, parricidium, Latin.] The murder of a father; murder of one to whom reverence is due.

Although he were a prince in military virtue approved, and likewiſe a good law-maker; yet his cruelties and parricides weighed down his virtues. Bacon.

Morat was always bloody, now he's baſe;
And has ſo far in uſurpation gone,
He will by parricide ſecure the throne. Dryden.

Parrici'dal. } adj. [from parricida, Latin.] Relating to parricide; committing parricide.
Parrici'dious. }

He is now paid in his own way, the parricidious animal, and puniſhment of murtherers is upon him. Brown.

Pa'rrot. n. ſ. [perroquet, French.] A particoloured bird of the ſpecies of the hooked bill, remarkable for the exact imitation of the human voice. See Paroquet.

Some will evermore peep through their eyes,
And laugh like parrots at a bag-piper. Shakeſpeare.
Who taught the parrot human notes to try?
'Twas witty want, fierce hunger to appeaſe. Dryden.

To Pa'rry. v. n. [parer, French.] To put by thruſts; to fence.

A man of courage, who cannot fence, and will put all upon one thruſt, and not ſtand parrying, has the odds againſt a moderate fencer. Locke.

I could
By dint of logick ſtrike thee mute;
With learned ſkill, now puſh, now parry,
From Darii to Bocardo vary. Prior.

To Parse. v. a [from pars, Latin.] To reſolve a ſentence into the elements or parts of ſpeech. It is a word only uſed in grammar ſchools.

Let him conſtrue the letter into Engliſh, and parſe it over perfectly. Aſcham's Schoolmaſter.

Let ſcholars reduce the words to their original, to the firſt caſe of nouns, or firſt tenſe of verbs, and give an account of their formations and changes, their ſyntax and dependencies, which is called parſing. Watts on the Mind.

Parsimo'nious. adj. [from parſimony.] Covetous; frugal; ſparing. It is ſometimes of a good, ſometimes of a bad ſenſe.

A prodigal king is nearer a tyrant, than a parſimonious; for ſtore at home draweth not his contemplations abroad, but want ſupplieth itſelf of what is next. Bacon.

Extraordinary funds for one campaign may ſpare us the expence of many years, whereas a long parſimonious war will drain us of more men and money. Addiſon.

Parſimonious age and rigid wiſdom. Rowe.

Parsimo'niously. adv. [from parſimonious.] Covetouſly; frugally; ſparingly.

Our anceſtors acted parſimoniouſly, becauſe they only ſpent their own treaſure for the good of their poſterity; whereas we ſquandered away the treaſures of our poſterity. Swift.

Parsimo'niousness. n. ſ. [from parſimonious.] A diſpoſition to ſpare and ſave.

PA'RSIMONY. n. ſ. [parſimonia, Latin.] Frugality; covetouſneſs; niggardlineſs; ſaving temper.

The ways to enrich are many: parſimony is one of the beſt, and yet is not innocent; for it withholdeth men from works of liberality. Bacon.

Theſe people, by their extreme parſimony, ſoon grow into wealth from the ſmalleſt beginnings. Swift.

Pa'rsley. n. ſ. [perſil, French; apium, Latin; perſli, Welſh.] An herb.

The biſhop of Saliſbury recommendeth the tenth ſatire of Juvenal, in his paſtoral letter, to the ſerious peruſal of the divines of his dioceſe. Dryden.

Pa´storal. n. ſ. A poem in which any action or paſſion is repreſented by its effects upon a country life: or according to the common practice in which ſpeakers take upon them the character of ſhepherds; an idyl; a bucolick.

Paſtoral is an imitation of the action of a ſhepherd; the form of this imitation is dramatick or narrative, or mixed of both, the fable ſimple, the manners not too polite nor too ruſtick. Pope.

The beſt actors in the world, for tragedy, comedy, hiſtory, paſtoral. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

There ought to be the ſame difference between paſtorals and elegies, as between the life of the country and the court; the latter ſhould be ſmooth, clean, tender, and paſſionate: the thoughts may be bold, more gay, and more elevated than in paſtoral. Walſh.

Pa´stry. n. ſ. [paſtiſſarie, French; from paſte.]

1. The act of making pies.

Let never freſh machines your paſtry try,
Unleſs grandees or magiſtrates are by,
Then you may put a dwarf into a pie. } King.

2. Pies or baked paſte.

Remember
The ſeed cake, the paſteries, and the furmenty pot. Tuſſer.

Beaſts of chaſe, or fowls of game,
In paſtry built, or from the ſpit, or boil'd,
Gris amber ſteam'd. Milton's Paradiſe Regained.

3. The place where paſtry is made.

They call for dates and quinces in the paſtry. Shakeſpeare.

Pa´stry-cook. n. ſ. [paſtry and cook.] One whoſe trade is to make and ſell things baked in paſte.

I wiſh you knew what my huſband has paid to the paſtrycooks and confectioners. Arbuthnot.

Pa´sturable. adj. [from paſture.] Fit for paſture.

Pa´sturage. n. ſ. [paſturage, French.]

1. The buſineſs of feeding cattle.

I wiſh there were ordinances, that whoſoever keepeth twenty kine, ſhould keep a plough going; for otherwiſe all men would fall to paſturage, and none to huſbandry. Spenſer.

2. Lands grazed by cattle.

France has a ſheep by her to ſhew, that the riches of the country conſiſted chiefly in flocks and paſturage. Addiſon.

3. The uſe of paſture.

Cattle fatted by good paſturage, after violent motion, die ſuddenly. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Pa´sture. n. ſ. [paſture, French.]

1. Food; the act of feeding.

Unto the conſervation is required a ſolid paſture, and a food congenerous unto nature. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. Ground on which cattle feed.

A careleſs herd,
Full of the paſture, jumps along by him,
And never ſtays. Shakeſpeare's As you like it.

When there was not room for their herds to feed together, they, by conſent, ſeparated and enlarged their paſture where it beſt liked them. Locke.

The new tribes look abroad
On nature's common, far as they can ſee
Or wing, their range and paſture. Thomſon's Spring.

3. Human culture; education. Not uſed.

From the firſt paſtures of our infant age,
To elder cares and man's ſeverer page
We laſh the pupil. Dryden.

To Pa´sture. v. a. [from the noun.] To place in a paſture.

To Pa´sture. v. n. [from the noun.] To graze on the ground.

The cattle in the fields and meadows green
Thoſe rare and ſolitary; theſe in flocks
Paſturing at once, and in broad herds upſprung. Milton.

Pa´sty. n. ſ. [paſte, French.] A pie of cruſt raiſed without a diſh.

Of the paſte a coffin will I rear,
And make two paſties of your ſhameful heads. Shakeſpeare.

I will confeſs what I know; if ye pinch me like a paſty, I can ſay no more. Shakeſpeare.

If you'd fright an alderman and mayor,
Within a paſty lodge a living hare. King.

A man of ſober life,
Not quite a madman, though a paſty fell,
And much too wiſe to walk into a well. Pope.

Pat. adj. [from pas, Dutch, Skinner.] Fit; convenient; exactly ſuitable either as to time or place. This is a low word, and ſhould not be uſed but in burleſque writings.

Pat pat; and here's a marvellous convenient place for our rehearſal. Shakeſpeare's Midſummer Night's Dream.

Now I might do it pat, now he is praying. Shakeſpeare.

They never ſaw two things ſo pat,
In all reſpects, as this and that. Hudibras.

Zuinglius dreamed of a text, which he found very pat to his doctrine of the Euchariſt. Atterbury.

He was ſorely put to't at the end of a verſe,
Becauſe he could find no word to come pat in. Swift.

Pat. n. ſ. [patte, French, is a foot, and thence pat may be a blow with the foot.]

1. A light quick blow; a tap.

The leaſt noiſe is enough to diſturb the operation of his brain; the pat of a ſhuttle-cock, or the creaking of a jack will do. Collier.

2. Small lump of matter beat into ſhape with the hand.

To Pat. v. a. [from the noun.] To ſtrike lightly; to tap.

Children prove, whether they can rub upon the breaſt with one hand, and pat upon the forehead with another, and ſtraightways they pat with both. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

Gay pats my ſhoulder, and you vaniſh quite. Pope.

2. To decorate the face with ſmall ſpots of black ſilk.

In the middle boxes, were ſeveral ladies who patched both ſides of their faces. Addiſon's Spectator.

We begg'd her but to patch her face,
She never hit one proper place. Swift.

3. To mend clumſily; to mend ſo as that the original ſtrength or beauty is loſt.

Any thing mended, is but patch'd. Shakeſpeare.

Phyſick can but mend our crazy ſtate,
Patch an old building, not a new create. Dryden.

Broken limbs, common prudence ſends us to the ſurgeons to piece and patch up. L'Eſtrange.

4. To make up of ſhreds or different pieces. Sometimes with up emphatical.

If we ſeek to judge of thoſe times, which the ſcriptures ſet us down without error, by the reigns of the Aſſyrian princes, we ſhall but patch up the ſtory at adventure, and leave it in confuſion. Raleigh's Hiſtory.

His glorious end was a patch'd work of fate,
Ill ſorted with a ſoft effeminate life. Dryden.

There is that viſible ſymmetry in a human body, as gives an intrinſick evidence, that it was not formed ſucceſſively and patched up by piece-meal. Bentley.

Enlarging an author's ſenſe, and building fancies of our own upon his foundation, we may call paraphraſing; but more properly changing, adding, patching, piecing. Felton.

PATCH. n. ſ. [pezzo, Italian.]

1. A piece ſewed on to cover a hole.

Patches ſet upon a little breach,
Diſcredit more in hiding of the flaw,
Than did the flaw before it was ſo patch'd. Shakeſpeare.

If the ſhoe be ript, or patches put;
He's wounded! ſee the plaiſter on his foot. Dryden.

2. A piece inſerted in moſaick or variegated work.

They ſuffer their minds to appear in a pie-bald livery of coarſe patches and borrowed ſhreds, ſuch as the common opinion of thoſe they converſe with clothe them in. Locke.

3. A ſmall ſpot of black ſilk put on the face.

How! providence! and yet a Scottiſh crew!
Then madam Nature wears black patches too. Cleaveland.

If to every common funeral,
By your eyes martyr'd, ſuch grace were allow'd,
Your face wou'd wear not patches, but a cloud. Suckling.

They were patched differently, and caſt hoſtile glances upon one another, and their patches were placed in different ſituations as party ſignals to diſtinguiſh friends from foes. Addiſon.

This the morning omens ſeem'd to tell;
Thrice from my trembling hand the patch-box fell. Pope.

PA´TCHER. n. ſ. [from patch.] One that patches; a botcher.

PA´TCHERY. n. ſ. [from patch.] Botchery; bungling work; forgery. A word not in uſe.

You hear him cogg, ſee him diſſemble,
Know his groſs patchery, love him, and feed him,
Yet remain aſſur'd that he's a made-up villain. Shakeſpeare.

PA´TCHWORK. n. ſ. [patch and work.] Work made by ſewing ſmall pieces of different colours interchangeably together.

When my cloaths were finiſhed, they looked like the patchwork, only mine were all of a colour. Swift.

Whoever only reads to tranſcribe ſhining remarks, without entering into the genius and ſpirit of the author, will be apt to be miſled out of the regular way of thinking; and all the product of all this will be found a manifeſt incoherent piece of patchwork. Swift.

Foreign her air, her robe's diſcordant pride
In patchwork flutt'ring. Pope.

To patch-work learn'd quotations are ally'd,
Both ſtrive to make our poverty our pride. Young.

PATE. n. ſ. [This is derived by Skinner from tête, Fr.] The head. Now commonly uſed in contempt or ridicule; but anciently in ſerious language.

Senſeleſs man, that himſelf doth hate,
To love another;
Here take thy lover's token on thy pate. Spenſer.

Behold the deſpaire,
By cuſtome and covetous pates,
By gaps and opening of gates. Tuſſer.

He is a traitor, let him to the tower,
And crop away that factious pate of his. Shakeſpeare.

Steal by line and level is an excellent paſs of pate. Shakeſpeare.

That ſly devil,
That broker that ſtill breaks the pate of faith,
That daily breakvow. Shakeſpeare.

Who dares
Say this man is a flatterer? The learned pate
Ducks to the golden fool. Shakeſpeare.

Thank your gentler fate,
That, for a bruis'd or broken pate,
Has freed you from thoſe knobs that grow
Much harder on the married brow. Hudibras.

If only ſcorn attends men for aſſerting the church's dignity, many will rather chuſe to neglect their duty, than to get a broken pate in the church's ſervice. South.

If any young novice happens into the neighbourhood of flatterers, preſently they are plying his full purſe and empty pate with addreſſes ſuitable to his vanity. South.

PA´TED. adj. [from pate.] Having a pate. It is uſed only in compoſition: as, long-pated or cunning; ſhallow-pated or fooliſh.

I bind,
On pain of puniſhment, the world to weet,
We ſtand up peerleſs. Shakeſpeare.

Her peerleſs feature, joined with her birth,
Approves her fit for none, but for a king. Shakeſpeare.

Heſperus, that led
The ſtarry hoſt, rode brighteſt; till the moon,
Riſing in cloudy majeſty, at length,
Apparent queen, unveil'd her peerleſs light. Milton.

Such muſick worthieſt were to blaze
The peerleſs light of her immortal praiſe,
Whoſe luſtre leads us. Milton.

Her dreſs, her ſhape, her matchleſs grace,
Were all obſerv'd, as well as heav'nly face;
With ſuch a peerleſs majeſty ſhe ſtands,
As in that day ſhe took the crown. Dryden.

PEE´RLESSNESS. n. ſ. [from peerleſs.] Univerſal ſuperiority.

PEE´VISH. adj. [This word Junius, with more reaſon than he commonly diſcovers, ſuppoſes to be formed by corruption from perverſe; Skinner rather derives it from beeiſh, as we ſay waſpiſh.]

Thou dareſt view my direful countenance;
I read thee raſh and heedleſs of thyſelf,
To trouble my ſtill ſeat and heaps of precious pelf. Spenſer.

Of traffick or return ſhe never taketh care;
Not provident of pelf, as many Iſlands are. Drayton.

Immortal gods, I crave no pelf;
I pray for no man but myſelf. Shakeſpeare.

He call'd his money in;
But the prevailing love of pelf
Soon ſplit him on the former ſhelf:
He put it out again. Dryden's Horace.

To the poor if he refuſ'd his pelf,
He us'd them full as kindly as himſelf. Swift.

Pe´lican. n. ſ. [pelicanus, low Latin; pellican, Fr.]

There are two ſorts of pelicans; one lives upon the water and feeds upon fiſh; the other keeps in deſerts, and feeds upon ſerpents and other reptiles: the pelican has a peculiar tenderneſs for its young; it generally places its neſt upon a craggy rock: the pelican is ſuppoſed to admit its young to ſuck blood from its breaſt. Calmet.

Should diſcarded fathers
Have this little mercy on their fleſh;
'Twas this fleſh begot thoſe pelican daughters. Shakeſpeare.

The pelican hath a beak broad and flat, like the ſlice of apothecaries. Hakewill on Providence.

PE´LLET. n. ſ. [from pila, Latin; pelote, French.]

1. A little ball.

A cube or pellet of yellow wax as much as half the ſpirit of wine, burnt only eighty-ſeven pulſes. Bacon.

That which is ſold to the merchants is made into little pellets, and ſealed. Sandys.

I dreſſed with little pellets of lint. Wiſeman's Surgery.

2. A bullet; a ball to be ſhot.

The force of gunpowder hath been aſcribed to rarefaction of the earthy ſubſtance into flame, and ſo followeth a dilatation; and therefore, leſt two bodies ſhould be in one place, there muſt needs alſo follow an expulſion of the pellet or blowing up of the mine: but theſe are ignorant ſpeculations; for flame, if there were nothing elſe, will be ſuffocated with any hard body, ſuch as a pellet is, or the barrel of a gun; ſo as the hard body would kill the flame. Bacon.

How ſhall they reach us in the air with thoſe pellets they can hardly roll upon the ground? L'Eſtrange.

In a ſhooting trunk, the longer it is to a certain limit, the more forcibly the air paſſes and drives the pellet. Ray.

Pe´lleted. adj. [from pellet.] Conſiſting of bullets.

My brave Egyptians all,
By the diſcandying of this pelleted ſtorm,
Lie graveleſs. Shakeſpeare.

Pe´llicle. n. ſ. [pellicula, Latin.]

1. A thin ſkin.

After the diſcharge of the fluid, the pellicle muſt be broke. Sharp.

Pe´llitory. n. ſ. [parietaria, Latin.] An herb.

Pe´llmell. adv. [peſle meſle, French.] Confuſedly; tumultuouſly; one among another; with confuſed violence.

When we have daſh'd them to the ground,
Then defie each other; and pell mell
Make work upon ourſelves. Shakeſpeare's King John.

Never yet did inſurrection want
Such moody beggars, ſtarving for a time
Of pell-mell havock and confuſion. Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

After theſe ſenators have in ſuch manner, as your grace hath heard, battered epiſcopal government, with their paper-ſhot, then they fall pell-mell upon the ſervice book. White.

He knew when to fall on pell mell,
To fall back and retreat as well. Hudibras.

Pells. n. ſ. [pellis, Latin.]

Clerk of the pells, an officer belonging to the exchequer, who enters every teller's bill into a parchment roll called pellis acceptorum, the roll of receipts; and alſo makes another roll called pellis exituum, a roll of the diſburſements. Bailey.

PELLU´CID. adj. [pellucidus, Latin.] Clear; tranſparent; not opake; not dark.

The colours are owing to the intermixture of foreign matter with the proper matter of the ſtone: this is the caſe of agates and other coloured ſtones, the colours of ſeveral whereof may be extracted, and the bodies rendered as pellucid as cryſtal, without ſenſibly damaging the texture. Woodward.

If water be made warm in any pellucid veſſel emptied of air, the water in the vacuum will bubble and boil as vehemently as it would in the open air in a veſſel ſet upon the fire, till it conceives a much greater heat. Newton's Opticks.

Pelluci´dity. }
Pellu´cidness. } n. ſ. [from pellucid.] Tranſparency; clearneſs; not opacity.

The air is a clear and pellucid menſtruum, in which the inſenſible particles of diſſolved matter float, without troubling the pellucidity of the air; when on a ſudden by a precipitation they gather into viſible miſty drops that make clouds. Locke.

We conſider their pellucidneſs, and the vaſt quantity of light that paſſes through them without reflection. Keil.

Pelt. n. ſ. [from pellis, Latin.]

1. Skin; hide.

The camel's hair is taken for the ſkin or pelt with the hair upon it. Brown Vulgar Errours.

A ſcabby tetter on their pelts will ſtick,
When the raw rain has pierc'd them to the quick. Dryden.

2. The quarry of a hawk all torn. Ainſworth.

Pelt-monger. n. ſ. [pellio, Latin; pelt and monger.] A dealer in raw hides.

To Pelt. v. a. [poltern, German, Skinner; contracted from pellet, Mr. Lye.]

1. To ſtrike with ſomething thrown. It is generally uſed of ſomething thrown, rather with teaſing frequency than deſtructive violence.

Poor naked wretches, whereſoe'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitileſs ſtorm!
How ſhall your houſeleſs heads and unfed ſides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedneſs defend you? Shakeſpeare.

Do but ſtand upon the foaming ſhore,
The chiding billows ſeem to pelt the clouds. Shakeſpeare.

No zealous brother there would want a ſtone
To maul us cardinals, and pelt pope Joan. Dryden.

Obſcure perſons have inſulted men of great worth, and pelted them from coverts with little objections. Atterbury.

The whole empire could hardly ſubdue me, and I might eaſily with ſtones pelt the metropolis to pieces. Swift.

2. To throw; to caſt.

My Phillis me with pelted apples plies,
Then tripping to the woods the wanton hies. Dryden.

Pe´lting. adj. This word in Shakeſpeare ſignifies, I know not why, mean; paltry; pitiful.

Could great men thunder, Jove could ne'er be quiet;
For every pelting petty officer
Would uſe his heav'n for thunder. Shakeſpeare.

Fogs falling in the land,
Have every pelting river made ſo proud,
That they have overborn their continents. Shakeſpeare.

They from ſheepcotes and poor pelting villages
Enforce their charity. Shakeſpeare.

A tenement or pelting farm. Shakeſpeare.

PE´LVIS. n. ſ. [Lat.] The lower part of the belly.

Pen. n. ſ. [penna, Latin.]

1. An inſtrument of writing.

Never durſt poet touch a pen to write,
Until his ink were temper'd with love's ſighs. Shakeſpeare.

Eternal deities!
Who write whatever time ſhall bring to paſs,
With pens of adamant on plates of braſs. Dryden.

He takes the papers, lays them down again;
And, with unwilling fingers, tries the pen. Dryden.

He remembers not that he took off pen from paper till he had done. Fell.

I can, by deſigning the letters, tell what new idea it ſhall exhibit the next moment, barely by drawing my pen over it, which will neither appear, if my hands ſtand ſtill; or though I move my pen, if my eyes be ſhut. Locke.

2. Feather.

The pens that did his pinions bind,
Were like main-yards with flying canvas lin'd. Spenſer.

3. Wing: though even here it may mean feather.

Feather'd ſoon and fledg'd,
They ſumm'd their pens; and ſoaring th' air ſublime,
With clang deſpis'd the ground. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

4. [From pennan, Saxon.] A ſmall incloſure; a coop.

My father ſtole two geeſe out of a pen. Shakeſpeare.

The cook was ordered to dreſs capons for ſupper, and take the beſt in the pen. L'Eſtrange.

She in pens his flocks will fold. Dryden's Horace.

Ducks in thy ponds, and chickens in thy pens,
And be thy turkeys num'rous as thy hens. King.

To Pen. v. a. pret. and part. paſſ. pent. [pennan and pından, Saxon.]

1. To coop; to ſhut up; to incage; to impriſon in a narrow place.

Away with her, and pen her up. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

My heavy ſon
Private in his chamber pens himſelf. Shakeſpeare.

The plaiſter alone would pen the humour already contained in the part, and forbid new humour. Bacon.

Their armour help'd their harm, cruſh'd in and bruis'd,
Into their ſubſtance pent. Milton.

As when a prowling wolf
Whom hunger drives to ſeek new haunt for prey,
Watching where ſhepherds pen their flocks at eve
In hurdled cotes, amid the field ſecure,
Leaps o'er the fence with eaſe into the fold. Milton.

The glaſs, wherein it is penned up, hinders it to deliver itſelf by an expanſion of its parts. Boyle.

The prevention of miſchief is preſcribed by the Jewiſh cuſtom; they pen up their daughters, and permit them to be acquainted with none. Harvey on Conſumptions.

Ah! that your buſineſs had been mine,
To pen the ſheep. Dryden.

2. [From the noun; pret. and part. paſſ. penned.] To write. It probably meant at firſt only the manual exerciſe of the pen, or mechanical part of writing; but it has been long uſed with relation to the ſtile or compoſition.

For prey theſe ſhepherds two he took,
Whoſe metal ſtiff he knew he could not bend
With hearſay pictures, or a window look,
With one good dance or letter finely penn'd. Sidney.

I would be loath to caſt away my ſpeech; for, beſides that it is excellently well penn'd, I have taken great pains to con it. Shakeſp.

Read this challenge, mark but the penning of it. Shakeſpeare.

A ſentence ſpoken by him in Engliſh, and penned out of his mouth by four good ſecretaries, for trial of our orthography, was ſet down by them. Camden's Remains.

He frequented ſermons, and penned notes with his own hand. Hayward on Edward VI.

The precepts penned, or preached by the holy Apoſtles, were as divine and as perpetual in reſpect of obligation. White.

The digeſting my thoughts into order, and the ſetting them down in writing was neceſſary; for without ſuch ſtrict examination, as the penning them affords, they would have been disjointed and roving ones. Digby on the Soul.

Almoſt condemn'd, he mov'd the judges thus:
Hear, but inſtead of me, my Oedipus;
The judges hearing with applauſe, at th' end
Freed him, and ſaid, no fool ſuch lines had penn'd. Denham.

Gentlemen ſhould extempore, or after a little meditation, ſpeak to ſome ſubject without penning of any thing. Locke.

Should I publiſh the praiſes that are ſo well penned, they would do honour to the perſons who write them. Addiſon.

Twenty fools I never ſaw
Come with petitions fairly penn'd,
Deſiring I ſhould ſtand their friend. Swift.

Pe´nal. adj. [penal, French; from pœna, Latin.]

1. Denouncing puniſhment; enacting puniſhment.

Gratitude plants ſuch generoſity in the heart of man, as ſhall more effectually incline him to what is brave and becoming than the terror of any penal law. South.

2. Uſed for the purpoſes of puniſhment; vindictive.

Adamantine chains and penal fire. Milton.

Pena´lity. n. ſ. [penalité, old French.] Liableneſs to puniſhment; condemnation to puniſhment.

Many of the ancients denied the Antipodes, and ſome unto the penality of contrary affirmations; but the experience of navigations can now aſſert them beyond all dubitation. Brown.

Pe´nalty. n. ſ. [from penalité, old French.]

1. Puniſhment; cenſure; judicial infliction.

Political power is a right of making laws with penalties of death, and conſequently all leſs penalties, for preſerving property, and employing the force of the community in the execution of laws. Locke.

Beneath her footſtool, ſcience groans in chains,
And wit dreads exile, penalties, and pains. Dunciad.

2. Forfeiture upon non-performance.

Lend this money, not as to thy friend,
But lend it rather to thine enemy,
Who, if he break, thou may'ſt with better face
Exact the penalty. Shakeſpeare's Merchant of Venice.

Pence. n. ſ. The plural of penny; formed from pennies, by a contraction uſual in the rapidity of colloquial ſpeech.

The ſame ſervant found one of his fellow-ſervants, which owed him an hundred pence, and took him by the throat. Matthew.

Pe´ncil. n. ſ. [penicillum, Latin.]

1. A ſmall bruſh of hair which painters dip in their colours.

The Indians will perfectly repreſent in feathers whatſoever they ſee drawn with pencils. Heylyn.

Pencils can by one ſlight touch reſtore
Smiles to that changed face, that wept before. Dryden.

For thee the groves green liv'ries wear,
For thee the graces lead the dancing hours,
And nature's ready pencil paints the flow'rs. Dryden.

A ſort of pictures there is, wherein the colours, as laid by the pencil on the table, mark out very odd figures. Locke.

The faithful pencil has deſign'd
Some bright idea of the maſter's mind,
Where a new world leaps out at his command,
And ready nature waits upon his hand. Pope.

2. A black lead pen, with which cut to a point they write without ink.

Mark with a pen or pencil the moſt conſiderable things in the books you deſire to remember. Watts.

3. Any inſtrument of writing without ink.

To Pe´ncil. v. n. [from the noun.] To paint.

Painting is almoſt the natural man;
For ſince diſhonour trafficks with man's nature,
He is but outſide: pencil'd figures are
Ev'n ſuch as they give out. Shakeſpeare's Timon of Athens.

Pulſe of all kinds diffus'd their od'rous pow'rs,
Where nature pencils butterflies on flow'rs. Harte.

Pe´ndant. n. ſ. [pendant, French.]

The ſpirits
Some thrid the mazy ringlets of her hair,
Some hang upon the pendents of her ear. Pope.

2. Any thing hanging by way of ornament.

Unripe fruit, whoſe verdant ſtalks do cleave
Cloſe to the tree, which grieves no leſs to leave
The ſmiling pendant which adorns her ſo,
And until Autumn on the bough ſhould grow. Waller.

3. A pendulum. Obſolete.

To make the ſame pendant go twice as faſt as it did, or make every undulation of it in half the time it did, make the line, at which it hangs, double in geometrical proportion to the line at which it hanged before. Digby on the Soul.

4. A ſmall flag in ſhips.

Pe´ndence. n. ſ. [from pendeo, Latin.] Slopeneſs; inclination.

The Italians give the cover a graceful pendence or ſlopeneſs, dividing the whole breadth into nine parts, whereof two ſhall ſerve for the elevation of the higheſt top or ridge from the loweſt. Wotton.

Pe´ndency. n. ſ. [from pendeo, Latin.] Suſpenſe; delay of deciſion.

The judge ſhall pronounce in the principal cauſe, nor can the appellant allege pendency of ſuit. Ayliffe.

Pe´ndent. adj. [pendens, Latin; ſome write pendant, from the French.]

To PE´NETRATE. v. n.

1. To make way.

Court virtues bear, like gems, the higheſt rate,
Born where heav'n's influence ſcarce can penetrate:
Though the ſame ſun with all diffuſive rays
Smile in the roſe, and in the diamond blaze,
We praiſe the ſtronger effort of his pow'r,
And always ſet the gem above the flow'r. Pope.

2. To make way by the mind.

If we reached no farther than metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the inſide and reality of the thing. Locke.

PENETRA´TION. n. ſ. [penetration, French; from penetrate.]

1. The act of entering into any body.

It warms
The univerſe, and to each inward part
With gentle penetration though unſeen
Shoots inviſible virtue even to the deep. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

2. Mental entrance into any thing abſtruſe.

A penetration into the abſtruſe difficulties and depths of modern algebra and fluxions, is not worth the labour of thoſe who deſign either of the three learned profeſſions. Watts.

3. Acuteneſs; ſagacity.

The proudeſt admirer of his own parts might conſult with others, though of inferior capacity and penetration. Watts.

PE´NETRATIVE. adj. [from penetrate.]

O thou, whoſe penetrative wiſdom found
The ſouth ſea rocks and ſhelves, where thouſands drown'd. Swift's Miſcellanies.

3. Having the power to impreſs the mind.

Would'ſt thou ſee
Thy maſter thus with pleacht arms, bending down
His corrigible neck, his face ſubdu'd
To penetrative ſhame. Shakeſpeare.

PE´NETRATIVENESS. n. ſ. [from penetrative.] The quality of being penetrative.

PE´NGUIN. n. ſ. [anſer magellanicus, Latin.]

1. A bird. This bird was found with this name, as is ſuppoſed, by the firſt diſcoverers of America; and penguin ſignifying in Welſh a white head, and the head of this fowl being white, it has been imagined that America was peopled from Wales; whence Hudibras:

British Indians nam'd from penguins.

Grew gives another account of the name, deriving it from pinguis, Latin, fat; but is, I believe, miſtaken.

The penguin is ſo called from his extraordinary fatneſs: for though he be no higher than a large gooſe, yet he weighs ſometimes ſixteen pounds; his wings are extreme ſhort and little, altogether unuſeful for flight, but by the help whereof he ſwims very ſwiftly. Grew's Muſæum.

2. A fruit.

The penguin is very common in the Weſt Indies, where the juice of its fruit is often put into punch, being of a ſharp acid flavour: there is alſo a wine made of the juice of this fruit, but it will not keep good long. Miller.

PENI´NSULA. n. ſ. [Latin, pene inſula; peninſule, Fr.] A piece of land almoſt ſurrounded by the ſea, but joined by a narrow neck to the main.

To mitigate, if not reverſe the doom. Dryden.

PE´NITENT. adj. [penitent, French; pænitens, Lat.] Repentant; contrite for ſin; ſorrowful for paſt tranſgreſſions, and reſolutely amending life.

Much it joys me
To ſee you become ſo penitent. Shakeſpeare.

Nor in the land of their captivity
Humbled themſelves, or penitent beſought
The God of their forefathers. Milton's Paradiſe Regained.

Provoking God to raiſe them enemies;
From whom as oft he ſaves them penitent. Milton.

The proud he tam'd, the penitent he chear'd,
Nor to rebuke the rich offender fear'd;
His preaching much, but more his practice wrought,
A living ſermon of the truths he taught. Dryden.

PE´NITENT. n. ſ.

1. One ſorrowful for ſin.

Concealed treaſures ſhall be brought into uſe by the induſtry of converted penitents, whoſe carcaſes the impartial laws ſhall dedicate to the worms of the earth. Bacon.

The repentance, which is formed by a grateful ſenſe of the divine goodneſs towards him, is reſolved on while all the appetites are in their ſtrength: the penitent conquers the temptations of ſin in their full force. Rogers.

2. One under cenſures of the church, but admitted to pennance.

The counterfeit Dionyſius deſcribes the practice of the church, that the catechumens and penitents were admitted to the leſſons and pſalms, and then excluded. Stillingfleet.

I told her,
On your diſpleaſure's peril,
She ſhould not viſit you. Shakeſpeare's Winter's Tale.

PE'RILOUS. adj. [perileux, French; from peril.]

1. Dangerous; hazardous; full of danger.

Alterations in the ſervice of God, for that they impair the credit of religion, are therefore perilous in common-weals, which have no continuance longer than religion hath all reverence done unto it. Hooker.

Her guard is chaſtity;
She that has that is clad in complete ſteel,
And like a quiver'd nymph with arrows keen
May trace huge foreſts and unharbour'd heaths,
Infamous hills and ſandy perilous wilds. Milton.

Dictate propitious to my duteous ear,
What arts can captivate the changeful ſeer:
For perilous th' aſſay, unheard the toil
T' elude the preſcience of a God by guile. Pope.

2. It is uſed by way of emphaſis, or ludicrous exaggeration of any thing bad.

Thus was th' accompliſh'd ſquire endu'd
With gifts and knowledge per'lous ſhrewd. Hudibras.

3. Smart; witty. In this ſenſe it is, I think, only applied to children, and probably obtained its ſignification from the notion, that children eminent for wit do not live; a witty boy was therefore a perilous boy, or a boy in danger. It is vulgarly parlous.

'Tis a per'lous boy,
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;
He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shakeſpeare.

PE'RILOUSLY. adv. [from perilous.] Dangerouſly.

PE'RILOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from perilous.] Dangerouſneſs.

PE'RIOD. n. ſ. [periode, French; περίοδος.]

1. A circuit.
2. Time in which any thing is performed, ſo as to begin again in the ſame manner.

Tell theſe, that the ſun is fixed in the centre, that the earth with all the planets roll round the ſun in their ſeveral periods; they cannot admit a ſyllable of this new doctrine. Watts.

3. A ſtated number of years; a round of time, at the end of which the things compriſed within the calculation ſhall return to the ſtate in which they were at the beginning.

A cycle or period is an account of years that has a beginning and end, and begins again as often as it ends. Holder.

We ſtile a leſſer ſpace a cycle, and a greater by the name of period, and you may not improperly call the beginning of a large period the epocha thereof. Holder on Time.

4. The end or concluſion.

If my death might make this iſland happy,
And prove the period of their tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingneſs;
But mine is made the prologue to their play. Shakeſpeare.

There is nothing ſo ſecret that ſhall not be brought to light within the compaſs of our world; whatſoever concerns this ſublunary world in the whole extent of its duration, from the chaos to the laſt period. Burnet's Theory.

What anxious moments paſs between
The birth of plots and their laſt fatal periods!
Oh! 'tis a dreadful interval of time. Addiſon.

5. The ſtate at which any thing terminates.

Beauty's empires, like to greater ſtates,
Have certain periods ſet, and hidden fates. Suckling.

Light-conſerving ſtones muſt be ſet in the ſun before they retain light, and the light will appear greater or leſſer, until they come to their utmoſt period. Digby.

6. Length of duration.

Characters drawn on duſt, that the firſt breath of wind effaces, are altogether as uſeful as the thoughts of a ſoul that periſh in thinking. Locke.

Expoſing their children, and leaving them in the fields to periſh by want, has been the practice. Locke.

Still when the luſt of tyrant pow'r ſucceeds,
Some Athens periſhes, or ſome Tully bleeds. Pope.

In the Iliad, the anger of Achilles had cauſed the death of ſo many Grecians; and in the Odyſſey, the ſubjects periſhed through their own fault. Pope.

2. To be in a perpetual ſtate of decay.

Duration, and time which is a part of it, is the idea we have of periſhing diſtance, of which no two parts exiſt together, but follow in ſucceſſion; as expanſion is the idea of laſting diſtance, all whoſe parts exiſt together. Locke.

3. To be loſt eternally.

Theſe, as natural brute beaſts made to be deſtroyed, ſpeak evil of the things they underſtand not, and ſhall utterly periſh. 2 Peter.

O ſuffer me not to periſh in my ſins: Lord careſt thou not that I periſh, who wilt that all ſhould be ſaved, and that none ſhould periſh? Moreton's Daily Exerciſe.

To PE´RISH. v. a. To deſtroy; to decay. Not in uſe.

The ſplitting rocks cow'r'd in the ſinking ſands,
And would not daſh me with their ragged ſides;
Becauſe thy flinty heart, more hard than they,
Might in thy palace periſh Margaret. Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.

Riſe, prepar'd in black, to mourn thy periſh'd lord. Dryden.

He was ſo reſerved, that he would impart his ſecrets to nobody; whereupon this cloſeneſs did a little periſh his underſtandings. Collier.

Familiar now with grief your ears refrain,
And in the public woe forget your own,
You weep not for a periſh'd lord alone. Pope.

Pe´rishable. adj. [from periſh.] Liable to periſh; ſubject to decay; of ſhort duration.

We derogate from his eternal power to aſcribe to them the ſame dominion over our immortal ſouls, which they have over all bodily ſubſtances and periſhable natures. Raleigh.

To theſe purpoſes nothing can ſo much contribute as medals of undoubted authority not periſhable by time, nor confined to any certain place. Addiſon.

It is princes greateſt preſent felicity to reign in their ſubjects hearts; but theſe are too periſhable to preſerve their memories, which can only be done by the pens of faithful hiſtorians. Swift.

Human nature could not ſuſtain the reflection of having all its ſchemes and expectations to determine with this frail and periſhable compoſition of fleſh and blood. Rogers.

Thrice has he ſeen the periſhable kind
Of men decay. Pope's Odyſſey.

Pe´rishableness. n. ſ. [from periſhable.] Liableneſs to be deſtroyed; liableneſs to decay.

Suppoſe an iſland ſeparate from all commerce, but having nothing becauſe of its commonneſs and periſhableneſs fit to ſupply the place of money; what reaſon could any have to enlarge poſſeſſions beyond the uſe of his family? Locke.

Pe´rmanency. } n. ſ. [from permanent.]

1. Duration; conſiſtency; continuance in the ſame ſtate; laſtingneſs.

Salt, they ſay, is the baſis of ſolidity and permanency in compound bodies, without which the other four elements might be variouſly blended together, but would remain incompacted. Boyle.

Shall I diſpute whether there be any ſuch material being that hath ſuch a permanence or fixedneſs in being? Hale.

From the permanency and immutability of nature hitherto, they argued its permanency and immutability for the future. Burnet.

2. Continuance in reſt.

Such a punctum to our conceptions is almoſt equivalent to permanency and reſt. Bentley.

PE´RMANENT. adj. [permanent, French; permanens, Latin.]

1. Durable; not decaying; unchanged.

If the authority of the maker do prove unchangeableneſs in the laws which God hath made, then muſt all laws which he hath made be neceſſarily forever permanent, though they be but of circumſtance only. Hooker.

That eternal duration ſhould be at once, is utterly unconceivable, and that one permanent inſtant ſhould be commenſurate or rather equal to all ſucceſſions of ages. More.

Pure and unchang'd, and needing no defence
From ſins, as did my frailer innocence;
Their joy ſincere, with no more ſorrow mixt,
Eternity ſtands permanent and fixt. Dryden.

2. Of long continuance.

His meaning is, that in theſe, or ſuch other light injuries, which either leave no permanent effect, or only ſuch as may be born without any great prejudice, we ſhould exerciſe our patience. Kettlewell.

Pe´rspicil. n. ſ. [perſpicillum, Lat.] A glaſs through which things are viewed; an optick glaſs. Little uſed.

Let truth be
Ne'er ſo far diſtant, yet chronology,
Sharp-ſighted as the eagle's eye, that can
Out-ſtare the broad-beam'd day's meridian,
Will have a perſpicil to find her out,
And through the night of error and dark doubt,
Diſcern the dawn of truth's eternal ray,
As when the roſy morn buds into day. Craſhaw.

The perſpicil, as well as the needle, hath enlarged the habitable world. Glanville's Scepſis.

Perspicu´ity. n. ſ. [perſpicuité, French; from perſpicuous.]

The labour'd chyle pervades the pores
In all the arterial perforated ſhores. Blackmore.

Paper dipped in water or oil, the oculus mundi ſtone ſteeped in water, linen-cloth oiled or varniſhed, and many other ſubſtances ſoaked in ſuch liquors as will intimately pervade their little pores, become by that means more tranſparent than otherwiſe. Newton.

2. To paſs through the whole extenſion.

Matter, once bereaved of motion, cannot of itſelf acquire it again, nor till it be ſtruck by ſome other body from without, or be intrinſically moved by an immaterial ſelf-active ſubſtance, that can penetrate and pervade it. Bentley.

What but God,
Pervades, adjuſts and agitates the whole? Thomſon.

Perva´sion. n. ſ. [from pervade.] The act of pervading or paſſing through.

If fuſion be made rather by the ingreſs and tranſcurſions of the atoms of fire, than by the bare propagation of that motion, with which fire beats upon the outſide of the veſſels, that contain the matter to be melted; both thoſe kinds of fluidity, aſcribed to ſaltpetre, will appear to be cauſed by the pervaſion of a foreign body. Boyle.

PE´RVERSE. adj. [pervers, French; perverſus, Lat.]

1. Diſtorted from the right.

And nature breeds
Perverſe, all monſtrous, all prodigious things. Milton.

2. Obſtinate in the wrong; ſtubborn; untractable.

Thou for the teſtimony of truth haſt born
Univerſal reproach; far worſe to bear
Than violence; for this was all thy care
To ſtand approv'd in ſight of God, though worlds
Judg'd thee perverſe. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

To ſo perverſe a ſex all grace is vain,
It gives them courage to offend again. Dryden.

3. Petulant; vexatious; peeviſh; deſirous to croſs and vex; croſs.

O gentle Romeo,
If thou doſt love, pronounce it faithfully,
Or if you think I am too quickly won,

And write with fury, but correct with phlegm. Roſcommon.
He who ſupreme in judgment, as in wit,
Might boldly cenſure, as he boldly writ,
Yet judg'd with coolneſs, though he ſung with fire;
His precepts teach but what his works inſpire.
Our critics take a contrary extreme,
They judge with fury, but they write with phlegm. Pope.
Let melancholy rule ſupreme,
Choler preſide, or blood or phlegm,
It makes no diff'rence in the caſe,
Nor is complexion honour's place. Swift.

2. Water among the chymiſts.

A linen cloth, dipped in common ſpirit of wine, is not burnt by the flame, becauſe the phlegm of the liquor defends the cloth. Boyle.

PLANT. n. ſ. [plant, French; planta, Latin.]

1. Any thing produced from ſeed; any vegetable production.

What comes under this denomination, Ray has diſtributed under twenty-ſeven genders or kinds: 1. The imperfect plants, which do either totally want both flower and ſeed, or elſe ſeem to do ſo. 2. Plants producing either no flower at all, or an imperfect one, whoſe ſeed is ſo ſmall as not to be diſcernible by the naked eye. 3. Thoſe whoſe ſeeds are not ſo ſmall, as ſingly to be inviſible, but yet have an imperfect or ſtaminous flower; i. e. ſuch a one, as is without the petala, having only the ſtamina and the perianthium. 4. Such as have a compound flower, and emit a kind of white juice or milk when their ſtalks are cut off or their branches broken off. 5. Such as have a compound flower of a diſcous figure, the ſeed pappous, or winged with downe, but emit no milk. 6. The herbæ capitatæ, or ſuch whoſe flower is compoſed of many ſmall, long, fiſtulous or hollow flowers gathered round together in a round button or head, which is uſually covered with a ſquamous or ſcaly coat. 7. Such as have their leaves entire and undivided into jags. 8. The corymbiferous plants, which have a compound diſcous flower, but the ſeeds have no downe adhering to them. 9. Plants with a perfect flower, and having only one ſingle ſeed belonging to each ſingle flower. 10. Such as have rough, hairy or briſtly ſeeds. 11. The umbelliferous plants, which have a pentapetalous flower, and belonging to each ſingle flower are two ſeeds, lying naked and joining together; they are called umbelliferous, becauſe the plant, with its branches and flowers, hath an head like a lady's umbrella: [1.] Such as have a broad flat ſeed almoſt of the figure of a leaf, which are encompaſſed round about with ſomething like leaves. [2.] Such as have a longiſh ſeed, ſwelling out in the middle, and larger than the former. [3.] Such as have a ſhorter ſeed. [4.] Such as have a tuberoſe root. [5.] Such as have a wrinkled, channelated or ſtriated ſeed. 12. The ſtellate plants, which are ſo called, becauſe their leaves grow on their ſtalks at certain intervals or diſtances in the form of a radiant ſtar: their flowers are really monopetalous, divided into four ſegments, which look like ſo many petala; and each flower is ſucceeded by two ſeeds at the bottom of it. 13. The aſperifolia, or rough leaved plants: they have their leaves placed alternately, or in no certain order on their ſtalks; they have a monopetalous flower cut, or divided into five partitions, and after every flower there ſucceed uſually four ſeeds. 14. The ſuffrutices, or verticilate plants: their leaves grow by pairs on their ſtalks, one leaf right againſt another; their leaf is monopetalous, and uſually in form of an helmet. 15. Such as have naked ſeeds, more than four, ſucceeding their flowers, which therefore they call polyſpermæ plantæ ſemine nudo; by naked ſeeds, they mean ſuch as are not included in any ſeed pod. 16. Bacciferous plants, or ſuch as bear berries. 17. Multiſiliquous, or corniculate plants, or ſuch as have, after each flower, many diſtinct, long, ſlender, and many times crooked caſes or ſiliquæ, in which their ſeed is contained, and which, when they are ripe, open themſelves and let the ſeeds drop out. 18. Such as have a monopetalous flower, either uniform or difform, and after each flower a peculiar ſeed-caſe containing the ſeed, and this often divided into many diſtinct cells. 19. Such as have an uniform tetrapetalous flower, but bear theſe ſeeds in oblong ſiliquous caſes. 20. Vaſculiferous plants, with a tetrapetalous flower, but often anomalous. 21. Leguminous plants, or ſuch as bear pulſe, with a papilionaceous flower. 22. Vaſculiferous plants with a pentapetalous flower; theſe have, beſides the common calix, a peculiar caſe containing their ſeed, and their flower conſiſting of five leaves. 23. Plants with a true bulbous root, which conſiſts but of one round ball or head, out of whoſe lower part go many fibres to keep it firm in the earth: the plants of this kind come up but with one leaf; they have no footſtalk, and are long and ſlender: the ſeed veſſels are divided into three partitions: their flower is ſexapetalous. 24. Such as have their fruits approaching to a bulbous form: theſe emit, at firſt coming up, but one leaf, and in leaves, flowers and roots reſemble the true bulbous plant. 25. Culmiferous plants, with a graſſy leaf, are ſuch as have a ſmooth hollow-jointed ſtalk, with one ſharp pointed leaf at each joint, encompaſſing the ſtalk, and ſet out without any foot-ſtalk: their ſeed is contained within a chaffy huſk. 26. Plants with a graſſy leaf, but not culmiferous, with an imperfect or ſtaminous flower. 27. Plants whoſe place of growth is uncertain and various, chiefly water plants.

3. Beloved by the people; pleaſing to the people.

It might have been more popular and plauſible to vulgar ears, if this firſt diſcourſe had been ſpent in extolling the force of laws. Hooker.

Such as were popular,
And well-deſerving, were advanc'd by grace. Daniel.

The old general was ſet aſide, and prince Rupert put into the command, which was no popular change. Clarendon.

4. Studious of the favour of the people.

A popular man is, in truth, no better than a proſtitute to common fame and to the people. Dryden.

His virtues have undone his country;
Such popular humanity is treaſon. Addiſon's Cato.

5. Prevailing or raging among the populace: as, a popular diſtemper.

Popula'rity. n. ſ. [popularitas, Latin; popularité, French; from popular.]

1. Graciouſneſs among the people; ſtate of being favoured by the people.

The beſt temper of minds deſireth good name and true honour; the lighter, popularity and applauſe; the more depraved, ſubjection and tyranny. Bacon.

Your mind has been above the wretched affectation of popularity. Dryden.

Admire we then,
Or popularity, or ſtars, or ſtrings,
The mob's applauſes, or the gifts of kings? Pope.

He could be at the head of no factions and cabals, nor attended by a hired rabble, which his flatterers might repreſent as popularity. Swift.

2. Repreſentation ſuited to vulgar conception; what affects the vulgar.

The perſuader's labour is to make things appear good or evil, which as it may be performed by ſolid reaſons, ſo it may be repreſented alſo by colours, popularities, and circumſtances, which ſway the ordinary judgment. Bacon.

Po'pularly. adv. [from popular.]

1. In a popular manner; ſo as to pleaſe the crowd.

The victor knight
Bareheaded, popularly low had bow'd,
And paid the ſalutations of the crowd. Dryden.
Influenc'd by the rabble's bloody will,
With thumbs bent back, they popularly kill. Dryden.

2. According to vulgar conception.

Nor can we excuſe the duty of our knowledge, if we only beſtow thoſe commendatory conceits, which popularly ſet forth the eminency thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To PO'PULATE. v. n. [from populus, Latin.] To breed people.

When there be great ſhoals of people, which go on to populate, without foreſeeing means of life and ſuſtentation, it is of neceſſity, that once in an age they diſcharge a portion of their people upon other nations. Bacon's Eſſays.

Popula'tion. n. ſ. [from populate.] The ſtate of a country with reſpect to numbers of people.

The population of a kingdom does not exceed the ſtock of the kingdom, which ſhould maintain them; neither is the population to be reckoned only by number; for a ſmaller number, that ſpend more and earn leſs, do wear out an eſtate ſooner than a greater number, that live lower and gather more. Bacon.

Populo'sity. n. ſ. [from populous.] Populouſneſs; multitude of people.

How it conduceth unto populoſity, we ſhall make but little doubt; there are cauſes of numeroſity in any ſpecies. Brown.

PO'PULOUS. adj. [populoſus, Latin.] Full of people; numerouſly inhabited.

A wilderneſs is populous enough,
So Suffolk had thy heav'nly company. Shakeſpeare.
Far the greater part have kept
Their ſtation; heav'n, yet populous, retains Number ſufficient to poſſeſs her realms. Milton.

Po'pulously. adv. [from populous.] With much people.

Po'pulousness. n. ſ. [from populous.] The ſtate of abounding with people.

Po'rcelain. n. ſ. [porcelaine, French; ſaid to be derived from pour cent années; becauſe it was believed by Europeans, that the materials of porcelain were matured under ground one hundred years.]

1. China; china ware; fine diſhes, of a middle nature between earth and glaſs, and therefore ſemi-pellucid.

We have burials in ſeveral earths, where we put divers cements, as the Chineſe do their porcelain. Bacon.

We are not thoroughly reſolved concerning porcelain or china diſhes; that according to common belief, they are made of earth, which lieth in preparation about a hundred years under ground. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The fine materials made it weak;
Porcelain, by being pure, is apt to break. Dryden.
Theſe look like the workmanſhip of heav'n:
This is the porcelain clay of human kind,
And therefore caſt into theſe noble moulds. Dryden.

2. [Portulaca, Latin.] An herb. Ainſworth.

Porch. n. ſ. [porche, French; porticus, Latin.]

1. A roof ſupported by pillars before a door; an entrance.

Ehud went forth through the porch, and ſhut the doors of the parlour. Judges, iii. 23.

Not infants in the porch of life were free,
The ſick, the old, that could but hope a day
Longer by nature's bounty, not let ſtay. Ben Jonſon.

2. A portico; a covered walk.

All this done,
Repair to Pompey's porch, where you ſhall find us. Shakeſp.

Po'rcupine. n. ſ. [porc eſpi, or epic, French; porcoſpino, Italian.]

The porcupine, when full grown, is as large as a moderate pig: there is no other difference between the porcupine of Malacca and that of Europe, but that the former grows to a larger ſize. Hill.

This ſtubborn Cade
Fought ſo long, till that his thighs with darts
Were almoſt like a ſharp-quill'd porcupine. Shakeſpeare.
Long bearded comets ſtick,
Like flaming porcupines, to their left ſides,
As they would ſhoot their quills into their hearts. Dryden.

By the black prince of Monomotapa's ſide were the glaring cat-a-mountain and the quill-darting porcupine. Arbuthnot and Pope.

PORE. n. ſ. [pore, French; πόρος.]

1. Spiracle of the ſkin; paſſage of perſpiration.

Witches, carrying in the air, and transforming themſelves into other bodies, by ointments, and anointing themſelves all over, may juſtly move a man to think, that theſe fables are the effects of imagination; for it is certain, that ointments do all, if laid on any thing thick, by ſtopping of the pores, ſhut in the vapours, and ſend them to the head extremely. Bacon.

Why was the ſight
To ſuch a tender ball as th' eye confin'd,
So obvious and ſo eaſy to be quench'd;
And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,
That ſhe might look at will through every pore? Milton.

2. Any narrow ſpiracle or paſſage.

Pores are ſmall interſtices between the particles of matter which conſtitute every body, or between certain aggregates or combinations of them. Quincy.

From veins of vallies milk and nectar broke,
And honey ſweating through the pores of oak. Dryden.

To Pore. v. n. [πόρος is the optick nerve; but I imagine pore to come by corruption from ſome Engliſh word.] To look with great intenſeneſs and care; to examine with great attention.

All delights are vain; but that moſt vain,
Which with pain purchas'd, doth inherit pain;
As painfully to pore upon a book,
To ſeek the light of truth, while truth the while
Doth falſely blind the eyeſight. Shakeſpeare.
A book was writ, called Tetrachordon,
The ſubject new: it walk'd the town a while
Numb'ring good intellects; now ſeldom por'd on. Milton.

The eye grows weary, with poring perpetually on the ſame thing. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

Let him with pedants hunt for praiſe in books,
Pore out his life amongſt the lazy gownmen,
Grow old and vainly proud in fancy'd knowledge. Rowe
With ſharpen'd ſight pale antiquaries pore,
Th' inſcription value, but the ruſt adore. Pope.

He hath been poring ſo long upon Fox's Martyrs, that he imagines himſelf living in the reign of queen Mary. Swift.

The deſign is to avoid the imputation of pedantry, to ſhew that they underſtand men and manners, and have not been poring upon old unfaſhionable books. Swift.

Po'reblind. adj. [commonly ſpoken and written purblind.] Nearſighted; ſhortſighted.

Poreblind men ſee beſt in the dimmer light, and likewiſe have their ſight ſtronger near at hand, than thoſe that are not poreblind, and can read and write ſmaller letters; for that the ſpirts viſual in thoſe that are poreblind are thinner and rarer than in others, and therefore the greater light diſperſeth them. Bacon's Natural Hiſt.

Po'riness. n. ſ. [from pory.] Fullneſs of pores.

I took off the dreſſings, and ſet the trepan above the fractured bone, conſidering the porineſs of the bone below. Wiſeman.

You are no good member of the commonwealth; for, in converting Jews to Chriſtians, you raiſe the price of pork. Shakeſpeare.

All fleſh full of nouriſhment, as beef and pork, increaſe the matter of phlegm. Floyer on the Humours.

Po'rker. n. ſ. [from pork.] A hog; a pig.

Strait to the lodgments of his herd he run,
Where the fat porkers ſlept beneath the ſun. Pope.

Po'rkeater. n. ſ. [pork and eater.] One who feeds on pork.

This making of Chriſtians will raiſe the price of hogs; if we grow all to be porkeaters, we ſhall not ſhortly have a raſher on the coals for money. Shakeſpeare's Merchant of Venice.

Po'rket. n. ſ. [from pork.] A young hog.

A prieſt appears,
And off'rings to the flaming altars bears;
A porket, and a lamb that never ſuffer'd ſhears. Dryden.

Po'rkling. n. ſ. [from pork.] A young pig.

A hovel
Will ſerve thee in winter, moreover than that,
To ſhut up thy porklings thou meaneſt to fat. Tuſſer.

Poro'sity. n. ſ. [from porous.] Quality of having pores.

This is a good experiment for the diſcloſure of the nature of colours; which of them require a finer poroſity, and which a groſſer. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

Po'rous. adj. [poreux, French; from pore.] Having ſmall ſpiracles or paſſages.

Vultures and dogges have torne from every lim
His porous ſkin; and forth his ſoul is fled. Chapman.
The rapid current, which through veins
Of porous earth with kindly thirſt updrawn,
Roſe a freſh fountain, and with many a rill
Water'd the garden. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.
Of light the greater part he took, and, plac'd
In the ſun's orb, made porous to receive
And drink the liquid light; firm to retain
Her gather'd beams; great palace now of light. Milton.

Po'rousness. n. ſ. [from porous.] The quality of having pores; the porous part.

They will forcibly get into the porouſneſs of it, and paſs between part and part, and ſeparate the parts of that thing one from another; as a knife doth a ſolid ſubſtance, by having its thinneſt parts preſſed into it. Digby on Bodies.

Po'rphyre. } n. ſ. [from πορφύρα; porphyrites, Latin;
Po'rphyry. } porphyre, Fr.] Marble of a particular kind.

I like beſt the porphyry, white or green marble, with a mullar or upper ſtone of the ſame. Peacham on Drawing.

Conſider the red and white colours in porphyre; hinder light but from ſtriking on it, its colours vaniſh, and produce no ſuch ideas in us; but upon the return of light, it produces theſe appearances again. Locke.

Po'rpoise. } n. ſ. [porc poiſſon, French.] The ſea-
Po'rpus. } hog.

And wallowing porpice ſport and lord it in the flood. Drayt.

Amphibious animals link the terreſtrial and aquatick together; ſeals live at land and at ſea, and porpoiſes have the warm blood and entrails of a hog. Locke.

Parch'd with unextinguiſh'd thirſt,
Small beer I guzzle till I burſt;
And then I drag a bloated corpus
Swell'd with a dropſy like a porpus. Swift.

Porra'ceous. adj. [porraceus, Latin; porracé, Fr.] Greeniſh.

If the leſſer inteſtines be wounded, he will be troubled with porraceous vomiting. Wiſeman's Surgery.

It is not an eaſy problem to reſolve why garlick, molys and porrets have white roots, deep green leaves and black ſeeds. Brown.

Po'rridge. n. ſ. [more properly porrage; porrata, low Latin, from porrum, a leek.] Food made by boiling meat in water; broth.

I had as lief you ſhould tell me of a meſs of porridge. Shakeſp.

Po'rridgepot. n. ſ. [porridge and pot.] The pot in which meat is boiled for a family.

Po'rringer. n. ſ. [from porridge.]

1. A veſſel in which broth is eaten.

A ſmall wax candle put in a ſocket of braſs, then ſet upright in a porringer full of ſpirit of wine, then ſet both the candle and ſpirit of wine on fire, and you ſhall ſee the flame of the candle become four times bigger than otherwiſe, and appear globular. Bacon.

A phyſician undertakes a woman with ſore eyes, who dawbs 'em quite up with ointment, and, while ſhe was in that pickle, carries off a porringer. L'Eſtrange.

The porringers, that in a row
Hung high, and made a glitt'ring ſhow,
Were now but leathern buckets rang'd. Swift.

2. It ſeems in Shakeſpeare's time to have been a word of contempt for a head-dreſs; of which perhaps the firſt of theſe paſſages may ſhew the reaſon.

Here is the cap your worſhip did beſpeak.—
—Why this was moulded on a porringer. Shakeſpeare.

A haberdaſher's wife of ſmall wit rail'd upon me, till her pink'd porringer fell off her head. Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

Her ſmall gondelay her port did make,
And that gay pair, iſſuing on the ſhore,

I ſhould be ſtill
Peering in maps for ports, and ways and roads. Shakeſpeare.

The earl of Newcaſtle ſeized upon that town; when there was not one port town in England, that avowed their obedience to the king. Clarendon.

A weather-beaten veſſel holds
Gladly the port. Milton.

2. [Porta, Latin; poꞃꞇe, Saxon; porte, French.] A gate.

Shew all thy praiſes within the ports of the daughters of Sion. Pſalm ix. 14.

He I accuſe,
The city ports by this hath enter'd. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

O poliſh'd perturbation! golden care!
That keep'ſt the ports of ſlumber open wide
To many a watchful night; ſleep with it now!
Yet not ſo ſound, and half ſo deeply ſweet,
As he, whoſe brow with homely biggen bound,
Snores out the watch of night. Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

The mind of man hath two ports; the one always frequented by the entrance of manifold vanities; the other deſolate and overgrown with graſs, by which enter our charitable thoughts and divine contemplations. Raleigh.

From their ivory port the cherubim
Forth iſſu'd. Milton.

3. The aperture in a ſhip, at which the gun is put out.

At Portſmouth the Mary Roſe, by a little ſway of the ſhip in caſting about, her ports being within ſixteen inches of the water, was overſet and loſt. Raleigh.

The linſtocks touch, the pond'rous ball expires,
The vig'rous ſeaman every port hole plies,
And adds his heart to every gun he fires. Dryden.

4. [Portée, French.] Carriage; air; mien; manner; bearing; external appearance; demeanour.

In that proud port, which her ſo goodly graceth,
Whiles her fair face ſhe rears up to the ſky,
And to the ground her eyelids low embraceth,
Moſt goodly temperature ye may deſcry. Spenſer.

Think you much to pay two thouſand crowns,
And bear the name and port of gentleman? Shakeſpeare.

See Godfrey there in purple clad and gold,
His ſtately port and princely look behold. Fairfax.

Their port was more than human, as they ſtood;
I took it for a fairy viſion
Of ſome gay creatures of the element,
That in the colours of the rainbow live. Milton.

Now lay the line, and meaſure all thy court,
By inward virtue, not external port;
And find whom juſtly to prefer above
The man on whom my judgment plac'd my love. Dryden.

A proud man is ſo far from making himſelf great by his haughty and contemptuous port, that he is uſually puniſhed with neglect for it. Collier on Pride.

Thy plumy creſt
Nods horrible, with more terrific port
Thou walk'ſt, and ſeem'ſt already in the fight. Philips.

To Port. v. a. [porto, Latin; porter, Fr.] To carry in form.

The apprehenſion of his preſent portance,
Which gibingly, ungravely, he did faſhion. Shakeſpeare.

Porta'ss. n. ſ. [ſometimes called portuis; and by Chaucer, portheſe.] A breviary; a prayer book.

In his hand his porteſſe ſtill he bare,
That much was worn, but therein little red;
For of devotion he had little care. Spenſer.

An old prieſt always read in his portaſs mumpſimus domine for ſumpſimus; whereof when he was admoniſhed, he ſaid that he now had uſed mumpſimus thirty years, and would not leave his old mumpſimus for their new ſumpſimus. Camden.

Portcu'llis. } n. ſ. [portecouliſſe, French; quaſi porta
Po'rtcluse. } clauſa.] A ſort of machine like a harrow, hung over the gates of a city, to be let down to keep out an enemy.

Over it a fair portcullis hong,
Which to the gate directly did incline,
With comely compaſs and compacture ſtrong,
Neither unſeemly ſhort, nor yet exceeding long. Spenſer.

The cannon againſt St. Stephen's gate executed ſo well, that the portcullis and gate were broken, and entry opened into the city. Hayward.

She the huge portcullis high up drew,
Which but herſelf, not all the Stygian pow'rs
Cou'd once have mov'd. Milton.

Pyrrhus comes, neither men nor walls
His force ſuſtain, the torn portcullis falls. Denham.

The upper eyelid claps down, and is as good a fence as a portcullis againſt the importunity of the enemy. More.

The gates are open'd, the portcullis drawn;
And deluges of armies from the town
Come pouring in. Dryden.

Po'rtrait. n. ſ. [portrait, Fr.] A picture drawn after the life.

As this idea of perfection is of little uſe in portraits, or the reſemblances of particular perſons, ſo neither is it in the characters of comedy and tragedy, which are always to be drawn with ſome ſpecks of frailty, ſuch as they have been deſcribed in hiſtory. Dryden.

The figure of his body was ſtrong, proportionable, beautiful and were his picture well drawn, it muſt deſerve the praiſe given to the portraits of Raphael. Prior.

If a portrait painter is deſirous to raiſe and improve his ſubject, he has no other means than by approaching it to a general idea; he leaves out all the minute breaks and peculiarities in the face, and changes the dreſs from a temporary faſhion to one more permanent, which has annexed to it no ideas of meanneſs from its being familiar to us. Reynolds.

In portraits, the grace, and, we may add, the likeneſs, conſiſts more in taking the general air, than in obſerving the exact ſimilitude of every feature. Reynolds.

To Po'rtrait. v. a. [portraire, French; from the noun.] To draw; to portray. It is perhaps ill copied, and ſhould be written in the following examples portray.

In moſt exquiſite pictures, they blaze and portrait not only the dainty lineaments of beauty, but alſo round about ſhadow the rude thickets and craggy cliffs. Spenſer.

While like a cat with walnuts ſhod,
Stumbling at ev'ry ſtep ſhe trod. Swift's Miſcellanies.

Po´rwigle. n. ſ. A tadpole or young frog not yet fully ſhaped.

That black and round ſubſtance began to grow oval, after a while the head, the eyes, the tail to be diſcernible, and at laſt to become that which the ancients called gyrinus, we a porwigle or tadpole. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Po´ry. adj. [poreux, French; from pore.] Full of pores.

To the court arriv'd, th' admiring ſon
Beholds the vaulted roofs of pory ſtone. Dryden.

To POSE. v. a. [from poſe, an old word ſignifying heavineſs or ſtupefaction. ȝepoſe, Saxon. Skinner.]

1. To puzzle; to gravel; to put to a ſtand or ſtop.

Learning was pos'd, philoſophy was ſet,
Sophiſters taken in a fiſher's net. Herbert.

How God's eternal ſon ſhould be man's brother,
Poſeth his proudeſt intellectual power. Craſhaw.

The only remaining queſtion to me I confeſs is a poſing one. Hammond.

As an evidence of human infirmities, I ſhall give inſtances of our intellectual blindneſs, not that I deſign to poſe them with thoſe common enigmas of magnetiſm. Glanville.

Particularly in learning of languages, there is leaſt occaſion for poſing of children. Locke on Education.

2. To appoſe; to interrogate.

She in the preſence of others poſed him and ſifted him, thereby to try whether he were indeed the very duke of York or no. Bacon.

Po´ser. n. ſ. [from poſe.] One that aſketh queſtions to try capacities; an examiner.

He that queſtioneth much, ſhall learn much; but let his queſtions not be troubleſome, for that is fit for a poſer. Bacon.

Po´sited. adj. [poſitus, Latin. It has the appearance of a participle preter. but it has no verb.] Placed; ranged.

That the principle that ſets on work theſe organs is nothing elſe but the modification of matter, or the natural motion thereof thus, or thus poſited or diſpoſed, is moſt apparently falſe. Hale.

Posi´tion. n. ſ. [poſition, French; poſitio, Latin.]

1. State of being placed; ſituation.

Iron having ſtood long in a window, being thence taken, and by the help of a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of inquietude till it attain the former poſition. Wotton.

They are the happieſt regions for fruits, by the excellence of ſoil, the poſition of mountains, and the frequency of ſtreams. Temple.

Since no one ſees all, and we have different proſpects of the ſame thing, according to our different poſitions to it, it is not incongruous to try whether another may not have notions that eſcaped him. Locke.

By varying the poſition of my eye, and moving it nearer to or farther from the direct beam of the ſun's light, the colour of the ſun's reflected light conſtantly varied upon the ſpeculum as it did upon my eye. Newton's Opticks.

Place ourſelves in ſuch a poſition toward the object, or place the object in ſuch a poſition toward our eye, as may give us the cleareſt repreſentation of it; for a different poſition greatly alters the appearance of bodies. Watts's Logick.

2. Principle laid down.

Of any offence or ſin therein committed againſt God, with what conſcience can ye accuſe us, when your own poſitions are, that the things we obſerve ſhould every one of them be dearer unto us than ten thouſand lives? Hooker.

Let not the proof of any poſitions depend on the poſitions that follow, but always on thoſe which go before. Watts.

3. Advancement of any principle.

A fallacious illation is to conclude from the poſition of the antecedent unto the poſition of the conſequent, or the remotion of the conſequent to the remotion of the antecedent. Brown.

4. [In grammar.] The ſtate of a vowel placed before two conſonants, as pómpous; or a double conſonant, as áxle.

Posi´tional. adj. [from poſition.] Reſpecting poſition.

The leaves of cataputia or ſpurge plucked upwards or downwards, performing their operations by purge or vomit, as old wives ſtill do preach, is a ſtrange conceit, aſcribing unto plants poſitional operations. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

PO´SITIVE. adj. [poſitivus, Latin; poſitif, French.]

1. Not negative; capable of being affirmed; real; abſolute.

The power or bloſſom is a poſitive good, although the remove of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good. Bacon.

It is well and truly ſaid in ſchools, in ſin there is nothing poſitive; but it is a want of that which ought to be, or ſubſiſt, partly in the nature of man, and partly in the actions of nature. Perkins.

Hardneſs carries ſomewhat more of poſitive in it than impenetrability, which is negative; and is perhaps more a conſequence of ſolidity, than ſolidity itſelf. Locke.

Whatſoever doth or can exiſt, or be conſidered as one thing, is poſitive; and ſo not only ſimple ideas and ſubſtances, but modes alſo are poſitive beings, though the parts, of which they conſiſt, are very often relative one to another. Locke.

2. Abſolute; particular; direct; not implied.

As for poſitive words, that he would not bear arms againſt king Edward's ſon, though the words ſeem calm, yet it was a plain and direct over-ruling of the king's title. Bacon.

3. Dogmatical; ready to lay down notions with confidence; ſtubborn in opinion.

I am ſometimes doubting, when I might be poſitive, and ſometimes confident out of ſeaſon. Rymer.

Some poſitive perſiſting fops we know,
That, if once wrong, will needs be always ſo;
But you, with pleaſure, own your errors paſt,
And make each day a critick on the laſt. Pope.

4. Settled by arbitrary appointment.

In laws, that which is natural, bindeth univerſally; that which is poſitive, not ſo. Hooker.

Although no laws but poſitive be mutable, yet all are not mutable which be poſitive; poſitive laws are either permanent or elſe changeable, according as the matter itſelf is, concerning which they were made. Hooker.

The law is called poſitive, which is not inbred, imprinted, or infuſed, into the heart of man, by nature or grace; but is impoſed by an external mandate of a lawgiver, having authority to command. White.

Laws are but poſitive; love's pow'r we ſee,
Is nature's ſanction, and her firſt decree. Dryden.

5. Having the power to enact any law.

Not to conſent to the enacting of ſuch a law, which has no view beſides the general good, unleſs another law ſhall at the ſame time paſs, with no other view but that of advancing the power of one party alone; what is this but to claim a poſitive voice, as well as a negative? Swift.

6. Certain; aſſured: as, he was poſitive as to the fact.

Po´sitively. adv. [from poſitive.]

1. Abſolutely; by way of direct poſition.

The good or evil, which is removed, may be eſteemed good or evil comparatively, and not poſitively or ſimply. Bacon.

2. Not negatively.

It is impoſſible that any ſucceſſive duration ſhould be actually and poſitively infinite, or have infinite ſucceſſions already gone and paſt. Bentley.

3. Certainly; without dubitation.

Give me ſome breath, ſome little pauſe,
Before I poſitively ſpeak in this. Shakeſpeare's Richard III.

It was abſolutely certain, that this part was poſitively yours, and could not poſſibly be written by any other. Dryden.

4. Peremptorily; in ſtrong terms.

I would aſk any man, that has but once read the bible, whether the whole tenor of the divine law does not poſitively require humility and meekneſs to all men. Spratt.

Po´sitiveness. n. ſ. [from poſitive.]

1. Actualneſs; not mere negation.

The poſitiveneſs of ſins of commiſſion lies both in the habitude of the will and in the executed act too; whereas the poſitiveneſs of ſins of omiſſion is in the habitude of the will only. Norris.

2. Peremptorineſs; confidence.

This peremptorineſs is of two ſorts; the one a magiſterialneſs in matters of opinion, the other a poſitiveneſs in relating matters of fact; in the one we impoſe upon men's underſtandings, in the other on their faith. Government of the Tongue.

Positi´vity. n. ſ. [from poſitive.] Peremptorineſs; confidence. A low word.

Courage and poſitivity are never more neceſſary than on ſuch an occaſion; but it is good to join ſome argument with them of real and convincing force, and let it be ſtrongly pronounced too. Watts.

Po´siture. n. ſ. [poſitura, Latin.] The manner in which any thing is placed.

Suppoſing the poſiture of the party's hand who did throw the dice, and ſuppoſing all other things, which did concur to the production of that caſt, to be the very ſame they were, there is no doubt but in this caſe the caſt is neceſſary. Bramhall.

Po´snet. n. ſ. [from baſſinet, French. Skinner.] A little baſon; a porringer; a ſkillet.

To make proof of the incorporation of ſilver and tin in equal quantity, and alſo whether it yield no ſoilineſs more than ſilver; and again, whether it will endure the ordinary fire, which belongeth to chaffing-diſhes, poſnets, and ſuch other ſilver veſſels. Bacon.

PO´SSE. n. ſ. [Latin.] An armed power; from poſſe comitatûs, the power of the ſhires. A low word.

The poſſe comitatûs, the power of the whole county, is legally committed unto him. Bacon.

As if the paſſion that rules, were the ſheriff of the place, and came off with all the poſſe, the underſtanding is ſeized. Locke.

To POSSE´SS. v. a. [poſſeſſus, Latin; poſſeder, Fr.]

Generally praiſeful, fair and young, and ſkill'd in houſewiferies. Chapman's Iliad.

Prai'ser. n. ſ. [from praiſe.] One who praiſes; an applauder; a commender.

We men and praiſers of men ſhould remember, that if we have ſuch excellencies, it is reaſon to think them excellent creatures, of whom we are. Sidney.

Forgive me, if my verſe but ſay you are
A Sidney: but in that extend as far
As loudeſt praiſers. Ben Jonſon's Epigrams.

Turn to God, who knows I think this true,
And uſeth oft, when ſuch a heart miſſays,
To make it good; for ſuch a praiſer prays. Donne.

Praisewo'rthy. adj. [praiſe and worthy.] Commendable; deſerving praiſe.

The Tritonian goddeſs having heard
Her blazed fame, which all the world had fill'd,
Came down to prove the truth, and due reward
For her praiſeworthy workmanſhip to yield. Spenſer.

Since men have left to do praiſeworthy things,
Moſt think all praiſes flatteries; but truth brings
That ſound, and that authority with her name,
As to be rais'd by her is only fame. Ben Jonſon.

Firmus, who ſeized upon Egypt, was ſo far praiſeworthy, that he encouraged trade. Arbuthnot on Coins.

Prame. n. ſ. A flat-bottomed boat. Bailey.

To PRANCE. v. a. [pronken, Dutch, to ſet one's ſelf to ſhow.]

1. To ſpring and bound in high mettle.

Strow'd with Rome's citizens, and drench'd in ſlaughter,
His horſes hoofs wet with patrician blood. Addiſon.

3. To move in a warlike or ſhowy manner.

We ſhould neither have meat to eat, nor manufacture to clothe us, unleſs we could prance about in coats of mail, or eat braſs. Swift.

To PRANK. v. a. [pronken, Dutch.] To decorate; to dreſs or adjuſt to oſtentation.

Some prank their ruffs, and others timely dight
Their gay attire. Spenſer.

In wine and meats ſhe flow'd above the bank,
And in exceſs exceeded her own might,
In ſumptuous tire ſhe joy'd herſelf to prank,
But of her love too laviſh. Spenſer.

Theſe are tribunes of the people,
The tongues o' th' common mouth: I deſpiſe them;
For they do prank them in authority
Againſt all noble ſufferance. Shakeſpeare.

Your high ſelf,
The gracious mark o' th' land, you have obſcur'd
With a ſwain's wearing; and me, poor lowly maid,
Moſt goddeſs-like prank'd up. Shakeſpeare's Winter's Tale.

'Tis that miracle, and queen of gems,
That nature pranks, her mind attracts my ſoul. Shakeſp.

I had not unlock'd my lips
In this unhallow'd air, but that this jugler
Would think to charm my judgment as mine eyes,
Obtruding falſe rules, prankt in reaſon's garb. Milton.

Prank. n. ſ. A frolick; a wild flight; a ludicrous trick; a miſchievous act. A word of levity.

Lay home to him;
Tell him, his pranks have been too broad to bear with. Shak.

Such is thy audacious wickedneſs,
Thy lewd, peſtif'rous and diſſentious pranks;
The very infants prattle of thy pride. Shakeſpeare.

They cauſed the table to be covered and meat ſet on, which was no ſooner ſet down, than in came the harpies, and played their accuſtomed pranks. Raleigh.

They put on their clothes, and played all thoſe pranks you have taken notice of. Addiſon's Guardian.

To ſooty blackneſs, from the pureſt white. Addiſon's Ovid.

A little lively ruſtick, trained up in ignorance and prejudice, will prattle treaſon a whole evening. Addiſon.

I muſt prattle on, as afore,
And beg your pardon, yet this half hour. Prior.

Let cred'lous boys and prattling nurſes tell,
How, if the feſtival of Paul be clear,
Plenty from lib'ral horn ſhall ſtrow the year. Gay.

Pra'ttle. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Empty talk; trifling loquacity.

In a theatre the eyes of men,
After a well-grac'd actor leaves the ſtage,
Are idly bent on him that enters next,
Thinking his prattle to be tedious. Shakeſpeare's Rich. II.

The bookiſh theorick,
Wherein the toged conſuls can propoſe
As maſterly as he; mere prattle, without practice,
Is all his ſoldierſhip. Shakeſpeare's Othello.

The inſignificant prattle and endleſs garrulity of the philoſophy of the ſchools. Glanville.

Pra'ttler. n. ſ. [from prattle.] A trifling talker; a chatterer.

Poor prattler! how thou talk'ſt. Shakeſpeare.

Prattler, no more, I ſay;
My thoughts muſt work, but like a noiſeleſs ſphere,
Harmonious peace muſt rock them all the day;
No room for prattlers there. Herbert.

Pra'vity. n. ſ. [pravitas, Lat.] Corruption; badneſs; malignity.

Doubt not but that ſin
Will reign among them, as of thee begot;
And therefore was law given them, to evince
Their natural pravity. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

More people go to the gibbet for want of timely correction, than upon any incurable pravity of nature. L'Eſtrange.

I will ſhew how the pravity of the will could influence the underſtanding to a diſbelief of Chriſtianity. South.

Prawn. n. ſ. A ſmall cruſtaceous fiſh, like a ſhrimp, but larger.

I had prawns, and borrowed a meſs of vinegar. Shakeſpeare.

To Pray. v. n. [prier, French; pregare, Italian.]

1. To make petitions to heaven.

I will buy with you, ſell with you; but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. Shakeſpeare.

Pray for this good man and his iſſue. Shakeſpeare.

Ne'er throughout the year to church thou go'ſt,
Except it be to pray againſt thy foes. Shakeſpeare.

I tell him, we ſhall ſtay here at the leaſt a month; and he heartily prays, ſome occaſion may detain us longer. Shakeſpeare.

Is any ſick? let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him. James, v. 14.

Unſkilful with what words to pray, let me
Interpret for him. Milton.

He that prays, deſpairs not; but ſad is the condition of him that cannot pray; happy are they that can, and do, and love to do it. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

Thou, Turnus, ſhalt atone it by thy fate,
And pray to heav'n for peace, but pray too late. Dryden.

He prais'd my courage, pray'd for my ſucceſs;
He was ſo true a father of his country,
To thank me for defending ev'n his foes. Dryden.

They who add devotion to ſuch a life, muſt be ſaid to pray as Chriſtians, but live as heathens. Law.

Should you pray to God for a recovery, how raſh would it be to accuſe God of not hearing your prayers, becauſe you found your diſeaſe ſtill to continue. Wake.

2. To entreat; to aſk ſubmiſſively.

You ſhall find
A conqu'ror that will pray in aid for kindneſs,
Where he for grace is kneel'd to. Shakeſpeare.

Pray that in towns and temples of renown,
The name of great Anchiſes may be known. Dryden.

3. I Pray; that is, I pray you to tell me, is a ſlightly ceremonious form of introducing a queſtion.

But I pray, in this mechanical formation, when the ferment was expanded to the extremities of the arteries, why did it not break through the receptacle? Bentley's Sermons.

4. Sometimes only pray elliptically.

Barnard in ſpirit, ſenſe and truth abounds;
Pray then what wants he? fourſcore thouſand pounds. Pope.

To Pray. v. a.

1. To ſupplicate; to implore; to addreſs with ſubmiſſive petitions.

How much more, if we pray him, will his ear
Be open, and his heart to pity incline? Milton.

2. To aſk for as a ſupplicant.

He that will have the benefit of this act, muſt pray a prohibition before a ſentence in the eccleſiaſtical court. Ayliffe.

3. To entreat in ceremony or form.

Pray my collegue Antonius I may ſpeak with him;
And as you go, call on my brother Quintus,
And pray him with the tribunes to come to me. Ben Jonſon.

Pra'yer. n. ſ. [priere, French.]

1. Petition to heaven.

They did ſay their prayers, and addreſs'd them
Again to ſleep. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

O remember, God!
O hear her prayer for them as now for us. Shakeſpeare.

My heart's deſire and prayer to God for Iſrael is, that they might be ſaved. Romans, x. 1.

Unreaſonable and abſurd ways of life, whether in labour or diverſion, whether they conſume our time or our money, are like unreaſonable and abſurd prayers, and are as truly an offence to God. Law.

2. Mode of petition.

The ſolemn worſhip of God and Chriſt is neglected in many congregations; and inſtead thereof, an indigeſted form and conception of extemporal prayer is uſed. White.

3. Practice of ſupplication.

Were he as famous and as bold in war,
As he is fam'd for mildneſs, peace, and prayer. Shakeſpeare.

4. Single formule of petition.

He fell to his devotions on that behalf, and made thoſe two excellent prayers which were publiſhed immediately after his death. Fell.

Sighs now breath'd
Inutterable, which the ſpirit of prayer
Inſpir'd. Milton.

No man can always have the ſame ſpiritual pleaſure in his prayers; for the greateſt ſaints have ſometimes ſuffered the baniſhment of the heart, ſometimes are fervent, ſometimes they feel a barrenneſs of devotion; for this ſpirit comes and goes. Taylor.

5. Entreaty; ſubmiſſive importunity.

Prayer among men is ſuppoſed a means to change the perſon to whom we pray; but prayer to God doth not change him, but fits us to receive the things prayed for. Stillingfleet.

Pra'yerbook. n. ſ. [prayer and book.] Book of publick or private devotions.

Get a prayerbook in your hand,
And ſtand between two churchmen;
For on that ground I'll build a holy deſcant. Shakeſpeare.

I know not the names or number of the family which now reigns, farther than the prayerbook informs me. Swift.

Pre. [præ, Latin.] A particle which, prefixed to words derived from the Latin, marks priority of time or rank.

To PREACH. v. n. [prædico, Latin; preſcher, Fr.] To pronounce a publick diſcourſe upon ſacred ſubjects.

From that time Jeſus began to preach. Matthew, iv. 17.

Prophets preach of thee at Jeruſalem. Nehemiah, vi. 7.

It is evident in the apoſtles preaching at Jeruſalem and elſewhere, that at the firſt propoſal of the truth of Chriſt to them, and the doctrine of repentance, whole multitudes received the faith, and came in. Hammond.

Divinity would not paſs the yard and loom, the forge or anvil, nor preaching be taken in as an eaſier ſupplementary trade, by thoſe that diſliked the pains of their own. Decay of Piety.

As he was ſent by his father, ſo were the apoſtles commiſſioned by him to preach to the gentile world. Decay of Piety.

The ſhape of our cathedral is not proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre with galleries. Graunt.

To Preach. v. a.

1. To proclaim or publiſh in religious orations.

The Jews of Theſſalonica had knowledge, that the word of God was preached of Paul. Acts.

He decreed to commiſſionate meſſengers to preach this covenant to all mankind. Hammond.

2. To inculcate publickly; to teach with earneſtneſs.

There is not any thing publickly notified, but we may properly ſay it is preached. Hooker.

He oft to them preach'd
Converſion and repentance. Milton.

Can they preach up equality of birth,
And tell us how we all began from earth? Dryden.

Among the reſt, the rich Galeſus lies,
A good old man while peace he preach'd in vain,
Amidſt the madneſs of th' unruly train. Dryden.

Preach. n. ſ. [preſche, French; from the verb.] A diſcourſe; a religious oration. Not in uſe.

This overſight occaſioned the French ſpitefully to term religion in that ſort exerciſed, a mere preach. Hooker.

Prea'cher. n. ſ. [preſcheur, French; from preach.]

1. One who diſcourſes publickly upon religious ſubjects.

The Lord gave the word; great was the company of the preachers. Pſalm lxviii. 11.

You may hear the ſound of a preacher's voice, when you cannot diſtinguiſh what he ſaith. Bacon.

Here lies a truly honeſt man,
One of thoſe few that in this town
Honour all preachers; hear their own. Craſhaw.

2. One who inculcates any thing with earneſtneſs and vehemence.

No preacher is liſtened to but Time, which gives us the ſame train of thought, that elder people have tried in vain to put into our heads before. Swift.

Prea'chment. n. ſ. [from preach.] A ſermon mentioned in contempt; a diſcourſe affectedly ſolemn.

Was't you, that revell'd in our parliament,
And made a preachment of your high deſcent? Shakeſpeare.

All this is but a preachment upon the text. L'Eſtrange.

PREA'MBLE. n. ſ. [preambule, French.] Something previous; introduction; preface.

How were it poſſible that the church ſhould any way elſe with ſuch eaſe and certainty provide, that none of her children may, as Adam, diſſemble that wretchedneſs, the penitent confeſſion whereof is ſo neceſſary a preamble, eſpecially to common prayer? Hooker.

Truth as in this we do not violate, ſo neither is the ſame gainſayed or croſſed, no not in thoſe very preambles placed before certain readings, wherein the ſteps of the Latin ſervice book have been ſomewhat too nearly followed. Hooker.

Doors ſhut, viſits forbidden, and divers conteſtations with the queen, all preambles of ruin, though now and then he did wring out ſome petty contentments. Wotton.

This preamble to that hiſtory was not improper for this relation. Clarendon's Hiſtory of the Rebellion.

With preambles ſweet
Of charming ſymphony they introduce
Their ſacred ſong, and waken raptures high. Milton.

I will not detain you with a long preamble. Dryden.

Prea'mbulary. } Prea'mbulous. } adj. [from preamble.] Previous. Not in uſe, though not inelegant.

He not only undermineth the baſe of religion, but deſtroyeth the principle preambulous unto all belief, and puts upon us the remoteſt error from truth. Brown.

Preapprehe'nsion. n. ſ. [pre and apprehend.] An opinion formed before examination.

A conceit not to be made out by ordinary eyes, but ſuch as regarding the clouds, behold them in ſhapes conformable to preapprehenſions. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Prease. n. ſ. Preſs; crowd. Spenſer. See Press. Obſolete.

A ſhip into the ſacred ſeas,

Pre'bend. n. ſ. [præbenda, low Lat. prebende, Fr.]

1. A ſtipend granted in cathedral churches.

His excellency gave the doctor a prebend in St. Patrick's cathedral. Swift's Miſcellanies.

2. Sometimes, but improperly, a ſtipendiary of a cathedral; a prebendary.

Deans and canons, or prebends of cathedral churches, in their firſt inſtitution, were of great uſe, to be of counſel with the biſhop. Bacon.

Pre'bendary. n. ſ. [prebendarius, Lat.] A ſtipendiary of a cathedral.

To lords, to principals, to prebendaries. Hubbard.

I bequeath to the Reverend Mr. Grattan, prebendary of St. Audeon's, my gold bottle-ſcrew. Swift's Laſt Will.

PRECA'RIOUS. adj. [precarius, Latin; precaire, Fr.] Dependent; uncertain, becauſe depending on the will of another; held by courteſy; changeable or alienable at the pleaſure of another. No word is more unſkilfully uſed than this with its derivatives. It is uſed for uncertain in all its ſenſes; but it only means uncertain, as dependent on others: thus there are authors who mention the precariouſneſs of an account, of the weather, of a die.

What ſubjects will precarious kings regard?
A beggar ſpeaks too ſoftly to be heard. Dryden.

Thoſe who live under an arbitrary tyrannick power, have no other law but the will of their prince, and conſequently no privileges but what are precarious. Addiſon.

This little happineſs is ſo very precarious, that it wholly depends on the will of others. Addiſon's Spectator.

He who rejoices in the ſtrength and beauty of youth, ſhould conſider by how precarious a tenure he holds theſe advantages, that a thouſand accidents may before the next dawn lay all theſe glories in the duſt. Rogers's Sermons.

Preca'riously. adv. [from precarious.] Uncertainly by dependence; dependently; at the pleaſure of others.

If one ſociety cannot meet or convene together, without the leave or licence of the other ſociety; nor treat or enact any thing relative to their own ſociety, without the leave and authority of the other; then is that ſociety, in a manner, diſſolved, and ſubſiſts precariouſly upon the mere will and pleaſure of the other. Leſley.

Our ſcene precariouſly ſubſiſts too long
On French tranſlation and Italian ſong:
Dare to have ſenſe yourſelves; aſſert the ſtage,
Be juſtly warm'd with your own native rage. Pope.

Preca'riousness. n. ſ. [from precarious.] Uncertainty; dependence on others. The following paſſage from a book, otherwiſe elegantly written, affords an example of the impropriety mentioned at the word precarious.

Moſt conſumptive people die of the diſcharge they ſpit up, which, with the precariouſneſs of the ſymptoms of an oppreſſed diaphragm from a mere lodgment of extravaſated matter, render the operation but little adviſeable. Sharp's Surgery.

Precau'tion. n. ſ. [precaution, French; from præcautus, Latin.] Preſervative caution; preventive meaſures.

Unleſs our miniſters have ſtrong aſſurances of his falling in with the grand alliance, or not oppoſing it, they cannot be too circumſpect and ſpeedy in taking their precautions againſt any contrary reſolution. Addiſon on the War.

To Precau'tion. v. a. [precautioner, French; from the noun.] To warn beforehand.

By the diſgraces, diſeaſes and beggary of hopeful young men brought to ruin, he may be precautioned. Locke.

Preceda'neous. adj. [This word is, I believe, miſtaken by the author for præcidaneous; præcidaneus, Latin, cut or ſlain before. Nor is it uſed here in its proper ſenſe.] Previous; antecedent.

That priority of particles of ſimple matter, influx of the heavens and preparation of matter might be antecedent and precedaneous, not only in order, but in time, to their ordinary productions. Hale.

To Prece'de. v. a. [præcedo, Latin; preceder, Fr.]

1. To go before in order of time.

How are we happy, ſtill in fear of harm?
But harm precedes not ſin. Milton.

Arius and Pelagius durſt provoke,
To what the centuries preceding ſpoke. Dryden.

The ruin of a ſtate is generally preceded by an univerſal degeneracy of manners and contempt of religion. Swift.

2. To go before according to the adjuſtment of rank.

Prece'dence. } Prece'dency. } n. ſ. [from præcedo, Latin.]

1. The act or ſtate of going before; priority.

2. Something going before; ſomething paſt. Not uſed.

I do not like, but yet it does allay
The good precedence. Shakeſpeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

It is an epilogue or diſcourſe, to make plain
Some obſcure precedence that hath tofore been ſain. Shakeſp.

3. Adjuſtment of place.

Among the laws touching precedence in Juſtinian, divers are, that have not yet been ſo received every where by cuſtom. Selden.

The conſtable and marſhal had cognizance, touching the rights of place and precedence. Hale.

4. The foremoſt in ceremony.

None ſure will claim in hell
Precedence; none, whoſe portion is ſmall
Of preſent pain, that with ambitious mind
Will covet more. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

The royal olive accompanied him with all his court, and always gave him the precedency. Howel.

That perſon hardly will be found,
With gracious form and equal virtue crown'd;
Yet if another could precedence claim,
My fixt deſires could find no fairer aim. Dryden.

5. Superiority.

Books will furniſh him, and give him light and precedency enough to go before a young follower. Locke.

Being diſtracted with different deſires, the next inquiry will be, which of them has the precedency, in determining the will to the next action? Locke.

PRECE´DENT. adj. [precedent, French; præcedens, Lat.] Former; going before.

Do it at once,
Or thy precedent ſervices are all
But accidents unpurpos'd. Shakeſpeare's Ant. and Cleop.

Our own precedent paſſions do inſtruct us,
What levity's in youth. Shakeſpeare's Timon.

When you work by the imagination of another, it is neceſſary that he, by whom you work, have a precedent opinion of you, that you can do ſtrange things. Bacon.

Hippocrates, in his prognoſticks, doth make good obſervations of the diſeaſes that enſue upon the nature of the precedent four ſeaſons of the year. Bacon.

The world, or any part thereof, could not be precedent to the creation of man. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Truths, abſolutely neceſſary to ſalvation, are ſo clearly revealed, that we cannot err in them, unleſs we be notoriouſly wanting to ourſelves; herein the fault of the judgment is reſolved into a precedent default in the will. South.

PRE´CEDENT. n. ſ. [The adjective has the accent on the ſecond ſyllable, the ſubſtantive on the firſt.] Any thing that is a rule or example to future times; any thing done before of the ſame kind.

Examples for caſes can but direct as precedents only. Hooker.

Eleven hours I've ſpent to write it over,
The precedent was full as long a doing. Shakeſpeare.

No pow'r in Venice
Can alter a decree eſtabliſh'd:
'Twill be recorded for a precedent;
And many an errour, by the ſame example,
Will ruſh into the ſtate. Shakeſpeare's Merchant of Venice.

God, in the adminiſtration of his juſtice, is not tied to precedents, and we cannot argue, that the providences of God towards other nations ſhall be conformable to his dealings with the people of Iſrael. Tillotſon.

Such precedents are numberleſs; we draw
Our right from cuſtom; cuſtom is a law. Granville.

PRECE´DENTLY. adv. [from precedent, adj.] Beforehand.

PRECE´NTOR. n. ſ. [præcentor, Latin; precenteur, Fr.] He that leads the choir.

Follow this precentor of ours, in bleſſing and magnifying that God of all grace, and never yielding to thoſe enemies, which he died to give us power to reſiſt and overcome. Hammond.

PRE´CEPT. n. ſ. [precepte, French; præceptum, Lat.] A rule authoritatively given; a mandate; a commandment; a direction.

A profane perſon calls a man of piety a preciſian. Watts.

PRECI´SION. n. ſ. [preciſion, Fr.] Exact limitation.

He that thinks of being in general, thinks never of any particular ſpecies of being; unleſs he can think of it with and without preciſion at the ſame time. Locke.

I have left out the utmoſt preciſions of fractions in theſe computations as not neceſſary; theſe whole numbers ſhewing well enough the difference of the value of guineas. Locke.

I was unable to treat this part more in detail, without ſacrificing perſpicuity to ornament, without wandering from the preciſion or breaking the chain of reaſoning. Pope.

PRECI´SIVE. adj. [from preciſus, Lat.] Exactly limiting, by cutting off all that is not abſolutely relative to the preſent purpoſe.

Preciſive abſtraction is when we conſider thoſe things apart, which cannot really exiſt apart; as when we conſider mode, without conſidering its ſubſtance or ſubject. Watts.

To PRECLU´DE. v. a. [præcludo, Lat.] To ſhut out or hinder by ſome anticipation.

This much will obviate and preclude the objections of our adverſaries, that we do not determine the final cauſe of the ſyſtematical parts of the world, merely as they have reſpect to the exigencies or conveniencies of life. Bentley.

If you once allow them ſuch an acceptation of chance, you have precluded yourſelf from any more reaſoning againſt them. Bentley.

I fear there will be no way left to tell you, that I entirely eſteem you; none but that which no bills can preclude, and no king can prevent. Pope.

PRECO´CIQUS. adj. [præcocis, Latin; precoſe, Fr.] Ripe before the time.

Many precocious trees, and ſuch as have their ſpring in the winter, may be found in moſt parts. Brown.

Preco'city. n. ſ. [from precocious.] Ripeneſs before the time.

Some impute the cauſe of his fall to a precocity of ſpirit and valour in him; and that therefore ſome infectious ſouthern air did blaſt him. Howel's Vocal Foreſt.

To Preco'gitate. v. a. [præcogito, Lat.] To conſider or ſcheme beforehand.

Preconi'tion. n. ſ. [præ and cognitio, Lat.] Previous knowledge; antecedent examination.

Preconcei't. n. ſ. [præ and conceit.] An opinion previouſly formed.

A thing in reaſon impoſſible, which notwithſtanding through their miſfaſhioned preconceit, appeared unto them no leſs certain, than if nature had written it in the very foreheads of all the creatures. Hooker.

To Preconcei've. v. a. [præ and conceive.] To form an opinion beforehand; to imagine beforehand.

In a dead plain the way ſeemeth the longer, becauſe the eye hath preconceived it ſhorter than the truth; and the fruſtrations of that maketh it ſeem ſo. Bacon.

Fondneſs of preconceived opinions is not like to render your reports ſuſpect, nor for want of care, defective. Glanville.

The reaſon why men are ſo weak in governing is, becauſe moſt things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends, but they are forced to comply ſubſequently. South.

Preconce'ption. n. ſ. [præ and conception.] Opinion previouſly formed.

Cuſtom with moſt men prevails more than truth; according to the notions and preconceptions, which it hath formed in our minds, we ſhape the diſcourſe of reaſon itſelf. Hakewill.

Preco'ntract. n. ſ. [præ and contract. This was formerly accented on the laſt ſyllable.] A contract previous to another.

Some are ſuch as a man cannot make his wife, though he himſelf be unmarried, becauſe they are already precontracted to ſome other; or elſe are in too near a degree of affinity or conſanguinity. Ayliffe.

Precu'rse. n. ſ. [from præcurro, Lat.] Forerunning.

The like precurſe of fierce events,
As harbingers preceding ſtill the fates,
And prologue to the omen coming on,
Have heaven and earth together demonſtrated. Shakeſpeare.

Precu'rsor. n. ſ. [præcurſor, Latin; precurſeur, Fr.] Forerunner; harbinger.

Jove's lightnings, the precurſers
Of dreadful thunder claps, more momentary
Were not. Shakeſpeare's Tempeſt.

This contagion might have been preſaged upon conſideration of its preſcurſors, viz. a rude winter, and a cloſe, ſulphurous and fiery air. Harvey on the Plague.

Thomas Burnet played the precurſor to the coming of Homer in his Homerides. Pope.

Preda'ceous. adj. [from præda, Latin.] Living by prey.

As thoſe are endowed with poiſon, becauſe they are predaceous; ſo theſe need it not, becauſe their food is near at hand, and may be obtained without conteſt. Derham.

Pre'dal. adj. [from præda, Lat.] Robbing; practiſing plunder. This word is not countenauced from analogy.

Sarmatia, laid by predal rapine low,

His ruff creſt he rears,
And pricks up his predeſtinating ears. Dryden.

Predestina'tion. n. ſ. [predeſtination, French; from predeſtinate.] Fatal decree; pre-ordination.

Predeſtination we can difference no otherwiſe from providence and preſcience, than this, that preſcience only foreſeeth, providence foreſeeth and careth for, and hath reſpect to all creatures, and predeſtination is only of men; and yet not of all to men belonging, but of their ſalvation properly in the common uſe of divines; or perdition, as ſome have uſed it. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

Nor can they juſtly accuſe
Their maker, or their making, or their fate;
As if predeſtination over-rul'd
Their will, diſpoſ'd by abſolute decree,
Or high fore-knowledge. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Predestina'tor. n. ſ. [from predeſtinate.] One that holds predeſtination or the prevalence of pre-eſtabliſhed neceſſity.

Me, mine example let the Stoicks uſe,
Their ſad and cruel doctrine to maintain;
Let all predeſtinators me produce,
Who ſtruggle with eternal fate in vain. Cowley.

To Prede'stine. v. a. [præ and deſtine.] To decree beforehand.

Ye careful angels, whom eternal fate
Ordains on earth and human acts to wait,
Who turn with ſecret pow'r this reſtleſs ball,
And bid predeſtin'd empires riſe and fall. Prior.

Predetermina'tion. n. ſ. [predetermination, French; præ and determination.] Determination made beforehand.

This predetermination of God's own will is ſo far from being the determining of ours, that it is diſtinctly the contrary; for ſuppoſing God to predetermine that I ſhall act freely; 'tis certain from thence, that my will is free in reſpect of God, and not predetermined. Hammond's Fundamentals.

The truth of the catholick doctrine of all ages, in points of predetermination and irreſiſtibility, ſtands in oppoſition to the Calviniſts. Hammond.

To Prede'rmine. v. a. [præ and determine.] To doom or confine by previous decree.

We ſee in brutes certain ſenſible inſtincts antecedent to their imaginative faculty, whereby they are predetermined to the convenience of the ſenſible life. Hale.

Pre'dial. adj. [prædium, Lat.] Conſiſting of farms.

By the civil law, their predial eſtates are liable to fiſcal payments and taxes, as not being appropriated for the ſervice of divine worſhip, but for profane uſes. Ayliffe.

Pre'dicable. adj. [predicable, French; prædicabilis, Latin.] Such as may be affirmed of ſomething.

Predi'cable. n. ſ. [prædicabile, Latin.] A logical term, denoting one of the five things which can be affirmed of any thing.

Theſe they call the five predicables; becauſe every thing that is affirmed concerning any being, muſt be the genus, ſpecies, difference, ſome property or accident. Watts.

PREDI'CAMENT. n. ſ. [predicament, French; prædicamentum, Latin.]

1. A claſs or arrangement of beings or ſubſtances ranked according to their natures: called alſo categorema or category. Harris.

2. Claſs or kind deſcribed by any definitive marks.

The offender's life lies in the mercy
Of the duke only, 'gainſt all other voice;
In which predicament I ſay thou ſtand'ſt. Shakeſpeare.
I ſhew the line and the predicament,
Wherein you range under this ſubtle king. Shakeſpeare.

Predicame'ntal. adj. [from predicament.] Relating to predicaments.

Pre'dicant. n. ſ. [prædicans, Lat.] One that affirms any thing.

To PRE'DICATE. v. a. [predico, Lat.] To affirm any thing of another thing.

All propoſitions, wherein a part of the complex idea, which any term ſtands for, is predicated of that term, are only verbal; v. g. to ſay that gold is a metal. Locke.

To Pre'dicate. v. n. To affirm; to compriſe an affirmation.

It were a preſumption to think, that any thing in any created nature can bear any perfect reſemblance of the incomprehenſible perfection of the divine nature, very being itſelf not predicating univocally touching him and any created being. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Pre'dicate. n. ſ. [prædicatum, Lat.] That which is affirmed or denied of the ſubject: as, man is rational; man is not immortal.

The king himſelf frequently conſidered more the perſon who ſpoke, as he was in his prejudice, than the counſel itſelf that was given. Clarendon.

My comfort is, that their manifeſt prejudice to my cauſe will render their judgment of leſs authority. Dryden.

There is an unaccountable prejudice to projectors of all kinds, for which reaſon, when I talk of practiſing to fly, ſilly people think me an owl for my pains. Addiſon.

2. Miſchief; detriment; hurt; injury. This ſenſe is only accidental or conſequential; a bad thing being called a prejudice, only becauſe prejudice is commonly a bad thing, and is not derived from the original or etymology of the word: it were therefore better to uſe it leſs: perhaps prejudice ought never to be applied to any miſchief, which does not imply ſome partiality or prepoſſeſſion. In ſome of the following examples, its propriety will be diſcovered.

I have not ſpake one the leaſt word,
That might be prejudice of her preſent ſtate,
Or touch of her good perſon. Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

England and France might, through their amity,
Breed him ſome prejudice; for from this league
Peep'd harms that menac'd him. Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

Factions carried too high and too violently, is a ſign of weakneſs in princes, and much to the prejudice of their authority and buſineſs. Bacon.

How plain this abuſe is, and what prejudice it does to the underſtanding of the ſacred ſcriptures. Locke.

A prince of this character will inſtruct us by his example, to fix the unſteadineſs of our politicks; or by his conduct hinder it from doing us any prejudice. Addiſon.

To Pre'judice. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prepoſſeſs with unexamined opinions; to fill with prejudices.

Half pillars wanted their expected height,
And roofs imperfect prejudic'd the ſight. Prior.

Suffer not any beloved ſtudy to prejudice your mind, ſo far as to deſpiſe all other learning. Watts.

2. To obſtruct or injure by prejudices previouſly raiſed.

Companies of learned men, be they never ſo great and reverend, are to yield unto reaſon; the weight whereof is no whit prejudiced by the ſimplicity of his perſon, which doth allege it. Hooker.

Neither muſt his example, done without the book, prejudice that which is well appointed in the book. Whitgifte.

I am not to prejudice the cauſe of my fellow-poets, though I abandon my own defence. Dryden.

3. To injure; to hurt; to diminiſh; to impair; to be detrimental to. This ſenſe, as in the noun, is often improperly extended to meanings that have no relation to the original ſenſe; who can read with patience of an ingredient that prejudices a medicine?

The ſtrength of that law is ſuch, that no particular nation can lawfully prejudice the ſame by any their ſeveral laws and ordinances, more than a man by his private reſolutions, the law of the whole commonwealth wherein he liveth. Hooker.

The Danube reſcu'd, and the empire ſav'd,
Say, is the majeſty of verſe retriev'd?
And would it prejudice thy ſofter vein,
To ſing the princes, Louis and Eugene? Prior.

To this is added a vinous bitter, warmer in the compoſition of its ingredients than the watry infuſion; and, as gentian and lemon-peel make a bitter of ſo grateful a flavour, the only care required in this compoſition was to chuſe ſuch an addition as might not prejudice it. London Diſpenſatory.

Prejudi´cial. adj. [prejudiciable, French; from prejudice.]

1. Obſtructed by means of oppoſite prepoſſeſſions.

'Tis a ſad irreverence, without due conſideration to look upon the actions of princes with a prejudicial eye. Holyday.

2. Contrary; oppoſite.

What one ſyllable is there, in all this, prejudicial any way to that which we hold? Hooker.

3. Miſchievous; hurtful; injurious; detrimental. This ſenſe is improper. See Prejudice, noun and verb.

His going away the next morning with all his troops, was moſt prejudicial and moſt ruinous to the king's affairs. Clarendon.

One of the young ladies reads, while the others are at work; ſo that the learning of the family is not at all prejudicial to its manufactures. Addiſon's Guardian.

A ſtate of great proſperity, as it expoſes us to various temptations, ſo it is often prejudicial to us, in that it ſwells the mind with undue thoughts. Atterbury.

Prejudi´cialneſs. n. ſ. [from prejudicial.] The ſtate of being prejudicial; miſchievouſneſs.

Pre´lacy. n. ſ. [from prelate.]

1. The dignity or poſt of a prelate or eccleſiaſtick of the higheſt order.

Prelacies may be termed the greater benefices; as that of the pontificate, a patriarchſhip, an archbiſhoprick and biſhoprick. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. Epiſcopacy; the order of biſhops.

The preſbyter, puff'd up with ſpiritual pride,
Shall on the necks of the lewd nobles ride,
His brethren damn, the civil power defy,
And parcel out republick prelacy. Dryden.

How many are there, that call themſelves proteſtants, who put prelacy and popery together as terms convertible? Swift.

3. Biſhops. Collectively.

Divers of the reverend prelacy, and other moſt judicious men, have eſpecially beſtowed their pains about the matter of juriſdiction. Hooker's Dedication.

PRE´LATE. n. ſ. [prelat, French; prælatus, Latin.] An eccleſiaſtick of the higheſt order and dignity.

It beſeemed not the perſon of ſo grave a prelate, to be either utterly without counſel, as the reſt were, or in a common perplexity to ſhew himſelf alone ſecure. Hooker.

Hear him but reaſon in divinity,
And, all-admiring, with an inward wiſh
You would deſire the king were made a prelate. Shakeſpeare.

The archbiſhop of Vienna, a reverend prelate, ſaid one day to king Lewis XI. of France; Sir, your mortal enemy is dead, what time duke Charles of Burgundy was ſlain. Bacon.

Yet Munſter's prelate ever be accurſt,
In whom we ſeek the German faith in vain. Dryden.

Prela´tical. adj. [from prelate.] Relating to prelates or prelacy. Dict.

Prela´tion. n. ſ. [prælatus, Lat.] Preference; ſetting of one above the other.

In caſe the father left only daughters, they equally ſucceeded as in co-partnerſhip, without any prelation or preference of the eldeſt daughter to a double portion. Hale.

Pre´lature. } Pre´latureſhip. } n. ſ. [prælatura, Lat. prelature, French.] The ſtate or dignity of a prelate. Dict.

Prelība´tion. n. ſ. [from prælibo, Lat.] Taſte beforehand; effuſion previous to taſting.

The firm belief of this, in an innocent ſoul, is a high prelibation of thoſe eternal joys. More's Divine Dialogues.

Preli´minary. adj. [preliminaire, Fr. præ limine, Latin.] Previous; introductory; proemial.

My maſter needed not the aſſiſtance of that preliminary poet to prove his claim; his own majeſtick mien diſcovers him to be the king. Dryden.

Preli´minary. n. ſ. Something previous; preparatory act; preparation; preparative.

The third conſiſts of the ceremonies of the oath on both ſides, and the preliminaries to the combat. Notes on Iliad.

PRE´LUDE. n. ſ. [prelude, French; præludium, Lat.]

1. Some ſhort flight of muſick played before a full concert.

My weak eſſay
But ſounds a prelude, and points out their prey. Young.

2. Something introductory; ſomething that only ſhews what is to follow.

To his infant arms oppoſe
His father's rebels and his brother's foes;
Thoſe were the preludes of his fate,
That form'd his manhood, to ſubdue
The hydra of the many-headed hiſſing crew. Dryden.

The laſt Georgick was a good prelude to the Æneis, and very well ſhewed what the poet could do in the deſcription of what was really great. Addiſon.

One conceſſion to a man is but a prelude to another. Clariſſa.

To Prelu´de. v. a. [preluder, French; præludo, Lat.] To ſerve as an introduction; to be previous to.

Either ſongſter holding out their throats,
And folding up their wings, renew'd their notes,
As if all day, preluding to the fight,
They only had rehears'd, to ſing by night. Dryden.

Prelu´dious. adj. [from prelude.] Previous; introductory.

That's but a preludious bliſs,
Two ſouls pickeering in a kiſs. Cleaveland.

PRELU´DIUM. n. ſ. [Latin.] Prelude.

This Menelaus knows, expos'd to ſhare
With me the rough preludium of the war. Dryden.

Prelu´ſive. adj. [from prelude.] Previous; introductory; proemial.

The clouds
Softly ſhaking on the dimpled pool
Preluſive drops, let all their moiſture flow. Thomſon.

PREMATU´RE. adj. [premature, French; præmaturus, Latin.] Ripe too ſoon; formed before the time; too early; too ſoon ſaid, believed, or done; too haſty.

'Tis hard to imagine, what poſſible conſideration ſhould perſuade him to repent, till he depoſited that premature perſuaſion of his being in Chriſt. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Prematu´rely. adv. [from premature.] Too early; too ſoon; with too haſty ripeneſs.

Prematu´reneſs. } Prematu´rity. } n. ſ. [from premature.] Too great haſte; unſeaſonable earlineſs.

To PREME´DITATE. v. a. [præmeditor, Latin; premediter, French.] To contrive or form beforehand; to conceive beforehand.

To greet me with premeditated welcomes. Shakeſpeare.
With words premeditated thus he ſaid. Dryden.

To Preme´ditate. v. n. To have formed in the mind by previous meditation; to think beforehand.

Of themſelves they were rude, and knew not ſo much as how to premeditate; the ſpirit gave them ſpeech and eloquent utterance. Hooker's Eccleſiaſtical Polity.

Premedita´tion. n. ſ. [præmeditatio, Latin; premeditation, French; from premeditate.] Act of meditating beforehand.

Are all th' unlook'd-for iſſue of their bodies
To take their rooms ere I can place myſelf?
A cold premeditation for my purpoſe! Shakeſpeare.

Hope is a pleaſant premeditation of enjoyment, as when a dog expects, till his maſter has done picking of the bone. More.

He amidſt the diſadvantage of extempore againſt præmeditation, diſpelled with eaſe and perfect clearneſs all the ſophiſms that had been brought againſt him. Fell.

Verſe is not the effect of ſudden thought; but this hinders not, that ſudden thought may be repreſented in verſe, ſince thoſe thoughts muſt be higher than nature can raiſe without premeditation. Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.

To Preme´rit. v. a. [præmereor, Lat.] To deſerve before.

They did not forgive Sir John Hotham, who had ſo much premerited of them. King Charles.

Pre´mices. n. ſ. [primitiæ, Latin; premices, French.] Firſt fruits.

A charger, yearly filled with fruits, was offered to the gods at their feſtivals, as the premices or firſt gatherings. Dryden.

PRE´MIER. adj. [French.] Firſt; chief.

The Spaniard challengeth the premier place, in regard of his dominions. Camden's Remains.

Thus families, like realms, with equal fate,
Are ſunk by premier miniſters of ſtate. Swift.

To Premi´ſe. v. a. [præmiſſus, Latin.]

1. To explain previouſly; to lay down premiſes.

The apoſtle's diſcourſe here is an anſwer upon a ground taken; he premiſeth, and then infers. Burnet.

I premiſe theſe particulars, that the reader may know I enter upon it as a very ungrateful taſk. Addiſon.

2. To ſend before the time. Not in uſe.

O let the vile world end,
And the premiſed flames of the laſt day
Knit earth and heav'n together! Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.

Pre´miſes. n. ſ. [præmiſſa, Latin; premiſſes, French.]

1. Propoſitions antecedently ſuppoſed or proved.

They infer upon the premiſes, that as great difference as commodiouſly may be, there ſhould be in all outward ceremonies between the people of God, and them which are not his people. Hooker.

This is ſo regular an inference, that whilſt the premiſes ſtand firm, it is impoſſible to ſhake the concluſion. Decay of Piety.

She ſtudy'd well the point, and found
Her foes concluſions were not ſound,
From premiſes erroneous brought,
And therefore the deduction's nought. Swift's Miſcellanies.

2. In low language, houſes or lands: as, I was upon the premiſes.

Pre´miſs. n. ſ. [premiſſum, Latin.] Antecedent propoſition. This word is rare in the ſingular.

They know the major or minor, which is implied, when you pronounce the other premiſs and the concluſion. Watts.

Pre´mium. n. ſ. [præmium, Lat.] Something given to invite a loan or a bargain.

No body cares to make loans upon a new project; whereas men never fail to bring in their money upon a land-tax, when the premium or intereſt allowed them is ſuited to the hazard they run. Addiſon's Freeholder.

People were tempted to lend, by great premiums and large intereſt; and it concerned them to preſerve that government, which they had truſted with their money. Swift's Miſcellanies.

To PREMO´NISH. v. a. [præmoneo, Lat.] To warn or admoniſh beforehand.

To PREORDA´IN. v. a. [præ and ordain.] To ordain beforehand.

Sin is the contrariety to the will of God, and if all things be preordained by God, and ſo demonſtrated to be willed by him, it remains there is no ſuch thing as ſin. Hammond.

Few ſouls preordain'd by fate,
The race of gods have reach'd that envy'd ſtate. Roſcommon.

Preo´rdinance. n. ſ. [præ and ordinance.] Antecedent decree; firſt decree. Not in uſe.

Theſe lowly courteſies
Might ſtir the blood of ordinary men,
And turn preordinance and firſt decree
Into the law of children. Shakeſpeare's Julius Cæſar.

Preordina´tion. n. ſ. [from preordain.] The act of preordaining.

Prepara´tion. n. ſ. [preparatio, Latin; preparation, French; from prepare.]

1. The act of preparing or previouſly fitting any thing to any purpoſe.

Nothing hath proved more fatal to that due preparation for another life, than our unhappy miſtake of the nature and end of this. Wake's Preparation for Death.

2. Previous meaſures.

I will ſhew what preparations there were in nature for this diſſolution, and after what manner it came to paſs. Burnet.

3. Ceremonious introduction.

I make bold to preſs, with ſo little preparation, upon you.
—You're welcome. Shakeſpeare's Merry Wives of Windſor.

4. The act of making or fitting by a regular proceſs.

In the preparations of cookery, the moſt volatile parts of vegetables are deſtroyed. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

5. Any thing made by proceſs of operation.

I wiſh the chymiſts had been more ſparing, who magnify their preparations, inveigle the curioſity of many, and delude the ſecurity of moſt. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

6. Accompliſhment; qualification. Out of uſe.

Sir John, you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, authentick in your place and perſon, generally allowed for your many warlike, courtlike, and learned preparations. Shakeſpeare.

Prepa´rative. adj. [preparatif, French; from prepare.] Having the power of preparing or qualifying.

Would men have ſpent toilſome days and watchful nights in the laborious queſt of knowledge preparative to this work? South.

PREPOSSE´SSION. n. ſ. [from prepoſſeſs.]

1. Preoccupation; firſt poſſeſſion.

God hath taken care to anticipate and prevent every man to give piety the prepoſſeſſion, before other competitors ſhould be able to pretend to him; and ſo to engage him in holineſs firſt, and then in bliſs. Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. Prejudice; preconceived opinion.

Had the poor vulgar rout only, who were held under the prejudices and prepoſſeſſions of education, been abuſed into ſuch idolatrous ſuperſtitions, it might have been pitied, but not ſo much wondered at. South.

With thought, from prepoſſeſſion free, reflect
On ſolar rays, as they the ſight reſpect. Blackmore.

PREPO´STEROUS. adj. [præpoſterus, Latin.]

1. Having that firſt which ought to be laſt.

The method I take may be cenſured as prepoſterous, becauſe I thus treat laſt of the antediluvian earth, which was firſt in order of nature. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

2. Wrong; abſurd; perverted.

Put a caſe of a land of Amazons, where the whole government, publick and private, is in the hands of women: is not ſuch a prepoſterous government againſt the firſt order of nature, for women to rule over men, and in itſelf void? Bacon.

Death from a father's hand, from whom I firſt
Receiv'd a being! 'tis a prepoſterous gift,
An act at which inverted nature ſtarts,
And bluſhes to behold herſelf ſo cruel. Denham.

Such is the world's prepoſterous fate;
Amongſt all creatures, mortal hate
Love, though immortal, doth create. Denham.

The Roman miſſionaries gave their liberal contribution, affording their prepoſterous charity to make them proſelytes, who had no mind to be confeſſors or martyrs. Fell.

By this diſtribution of matter, continual proviſion is every where made for the ſupply of bodies, quite contrary to the prepoſterous reaſonings of thoſe men, who expected ſo different a reſult. Woodward.

3. Applied to perſons: fooliſh; abſurd.

Prepoſterous aſs! that never read ſo far
To know the cauſe why muſick was ordain'd. Shakeſpeare.

PREPO´STEROUSLY. adv. [from prepoſterous.] In a wrong ſituation; abſurdly.

Thoſe things do beſt pleaſe me,
That befal prepoſt'rouſly. Shakeſpeare's Midſ. Night's Dream.

Upon this ſuppoſition, one animal would have its lungs where another hath its liver, and all the other members prepoſterouſly placed; there could not be a like configuration of parts in any two individuals. Bentley's Sermons.

PREPO´STEROUSNESS. n. ſ. [from prepoſterous.] Abſurdity; wrong order or method.

PRE´POTENCY. n. ſ. [præpotentia, Latin.] Superior power; predominance.

If there were a determinate prepotency in the right, and ſuch as ariſeth from a conſtant root in nature, we might expect the ſame in other animals. Brown.

PREPU´CE. n. ſ. [prepuce, French; præputium, Lat.] That which covers the glans; foreſkin.

The prepuce was much inflamed and ſwelled. Wiſeman.

To PRERE´QUIRE. v. a. [præ and require.] To demand previouſly.

Some primary literal ſignification is prerequired to that other of figurative. Hammond.

PRERE´QUISITE. adj. [præ and requiſite.] Something previouſly neceſſary.

The conformation of parts is neceſſary, not only unto the prerequiſite and previous conditions of birth, but alſo unto the parturition. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Before the exiſtence of compounded body, there muſt be a preexiſtence of active principles, neceſſarily prerequiſite to the mixing theſe particles of bodies. Hale.

PRERO´GATIVE. n. ſ. [prerogative, French; prærogativa, low Lat.] An excluſive or peculiar privilege.

My daughters and the fair Parthenia might far better put in their claim for that prerogative. Sidney.

Our prerogative
Calls not your counſels, but our natural goodneſs
Imparts this. Shakeſpeare.

How could communities,
The primogeniture, and due of birth,
Prerogative of age, ſceptres, and crowns,
But by degree, ſtand in authentick place? Shakeſpeare.

The great Caliph hath an old prerogative in the choice and confirmation of the kings of Aſſyria. Knolles.

They are the beſt laws, by which the king hath the juſteſt prerogative, and the people the beſt liberty. Bacon.

Had any of theſe ſecond cauſes deſpoiled God of his prerogative, or had God himſelf conſtrained the mind and will of man to impious acts by any celeſtial inforcements? Raleigh.

They obtained another royal prerogative and power, to make war and peace at their pleaſure. Davies.

The houſe of commons to theſe their prerogatives over the lords, ſent an order to the lieutenant of the Tower, that he ſhould cauſe him to be executed that very day. Clarendon.

For freedom ſtill maintain'd alive,
Freedom an Engliſh ſubject's ſole prerogative,
Accept our pious praiſe. Dryden.

All wiſh the dire prerogative to kill,
Ev'n they wou'd have the pow'r, who want the will. Dryden.

It ſeems to be the prerogative of human underſtanding, when it has diſtinguiſhed any ideas, ſo as to perceive them to be different, to conſider in what circumſtances they are capable to be compared. Locke.

I will not conſider only the prerogatives of man above other animals, but the endowments which nature hath conferred on his body in common with them. Ray on the Creation.

PRERO´GATIVED. adj. [from prerogative.] Having an excluſive privilege; having prerogative.

'Tis the plague of great ones,
Prerogativ'd are they leſs than the baſe;
'Tis deſtiny unſhunable. Shakeſpeare.

PRES. Pres, preſt, ſeem to be derived from the Saxon, pꞃeoꞅꞇ, a prieſt; it being uſual in after times to drop the letter o in like caſes. Gibſon's Camden.

PRESA´GE. n. ſ. [preſage, French; præſagium, Lat.] Prognoſtick; preſenſion of futurity.

Joy and ſhout preſage of victory. Milton.

Dreams have generally been conſidered by authors only as revelations of what has already happened, or as preſages of what is to happen. Addiſon.

To PRESA´GE. v. a. [preſager, French; præſagio, Lat.]

1. To forbode; to foreknow; to foretell; to propheſy: it ſeems properly uſed of internal preſenſion.

Henry's late preſaging propheſy
Did glad my heart with hope. Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.

What pow'r of mind
Foreſeeing, or preſaging from the depth
Of knowledge paſt or preſent, could have fear'd
How ſuch united force of gods, how ſuch
As ſtood like theſe, could ever know repulſe? Milton.

This contagion might have been preſaged upon conſideration of its precurſors. Harvey on Conſumptions.

Wiſh'd freedom I preſage you ſoon will find,
If heav'n be juſt, and if to virtue kind. Dryden.

2. Sometimes with of before the thing foretold.

That by certain ſigns we may preſage
Of heats and rains, and wind's impetuous rage,
The ſovereign of the heav'ns has ſet on high
The moon to mark the changes of the ſky. Dryden.

3. To foretoken; to foreſhow.

If I may truſt the flattering ruth of ſleep,
My dreams preſage ſome joyful news at hand. Shakeſpeare.

Dreams adviſe ſome great good preſaging. Milton.

That cloud, that hangs upon thy brow, preſages
A greater ſtorm than all the Turkiſh power
Can throw upon us. Denham's Sophy.

When others fell, this ſtanding did preſage
The crown ſhou'd triumph over pop'lar rage. Waller.

PRESA´GEMENT. n. ſ. [from preſage.]

One of the more rigid preſbyterians. Swift.

PRE´SBYTERY. n. ſ. [from preſbyter.] Body of elders, whether prieſts or laymen.

Thoſe which ſtood for the preſbytery, thought their cauſe had more ſympathy with the diſcipline of Scotland than the hierarchy of England. Bacon.

Flea-bitten ſyned, an aſſembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders ana, like the rude
Chaos of preſbyt'ry, where laymen guide
With the tame woolpack clergy by their ſide. Cleaveland.

Could a feeble preſbytery, though perchance ſwelling enough, correct a wealthy, a potent offender? Holyday.

PRE´SCIENCE. n. ſ. [preſcience, Fr. from preſcient.] Foreknowledge; knowledge of future things.

They tax our policy, and call it coward,
Foreſtall our preſcience, and eſteem no act
But that of hand. Shakeſpeare's Troilus and Creſſida.

Preſcience or foreknowledge, conſidered in order and nature, if we may ſpeak of God after the manner of men, goeth before providence; for God foreknew all things before he had created them, or before they had being to be cared for; and preſcience is no other than an infallible foreknowledge. Raleigh.

God's preſcience, from all eternity, being but the ſeeing every thing that ever exiſts as it is, contingents as contingents, neceſſary as neceſſary, can neither work any change in the object, by thus ſeeing it, nor itſelf be deceived in what it ſees. Hammond.

If certain preſcience of uncertain events imply a contradiction, it ſeems it may be ſtruck out of the omniſciency of God, and leave no blemiſh behind. More.

Of things of the moſt accidental and mutable nature, God's preſcience is certain. South.

Freedom was firſt beſtow'd on human race,
And preſcience only held the ſecond place. Dryden.

PRE´SCIENT. adj. [præſciens, Latin.] Foreknowing; prophetick.

To drink the dregs of life. Dryden's Æneis.

To PRESCI´ND. v. a. [præſcindo, Lat.] To cut off; to abſtract.

A bare act of obliquity does not only preſcind from, but poſitively deny ſuch a ſpecial dependence. Norris.

PRESCI´NDENT. adj. [præſcindens, Lat.] Abſtracting.

We may, for one ſingle act, abſtract from a reward, which nobody who knows the preſcindent faculties of the ſoul, can deny. Cheyne's Philoſophical Principles.

To PRESCRI´BE. v. a. [præſcribo, Latin.]

1. To ſet down authoritatively; to order; to direct.

Doth the ſtrength of ſome negative arguments prove this kind of negative argument ſtrong, by force whereof all things are denied, which ſcripture affirmeth not, or all things, which ſcripture preſcribeth not, condemned? Hooker.

To the blanc moon her office they preſcrib'd. Milton.

There's joy, when to wild will you laws preſcribe,
When you bid fortune carry back her bribe. Dryden.

When parents loves are order'd by a ſon,
Let ſtreams preſcribe their fountains where to run. Dryden.

By a ſhort account of the preſſing obligations which lie on the magiſtrate, I ſhall not ſo much preſcribe directions for the future, as praiſe what is paſt. Atterbury.

2. To direct medically.

The end of ſatire is the amendment of vices by correction; and he who writes honeſtly is no more an enemy to the offender, than the phyſician to the patient, when he preſcribes harſh remedies. Dryden.

The extremeſt ways they firſt ordain,
Preſcribing ſuch intolerable pain,
As none but Cæſar could ſuſtain. Dryden.

Should any man argue, that a phyſician underſtands his own art beſt; and therefore, although he ſhould preſcribe poiſon to all his patients, he cannot be juſtly puniſhed, but is anſwerable only to God? Swift.

To PRESCRI´BE. v. n.

1. To influence by long cuſtom.

A reſerve of puerility we have not ſhaken off from ſchool, where being ſeaſoned with minor ſentences, they preſcribe upon our riper years, and never are worn out but with our memories. Brown.

2. To influence arbitrarily; to give law.

The aſſuming an authority of dictating to others, and a forwardneſs to preſcribe to their opinions, is a conſtant concomitant of this bias of our judgments. Locke.

3. [Preſcrire, French.] To form a cuſtom which has the force of law.

That obligation upon the lands did not preſcribe or come into diſuſe, but by fifty conſecutive years of exemption. Arbuthnot.

4. To write medical directions and forms of medicine.

Modern 'pothecaries, taught the art
By doctors' bills to play the doctor's part,

Preſcribe, apply, and call their maſters fools. Pope.

PRE´SCRIPT. adj. [præſcriptus, Lat.] Directed; accurately laid down in a precept.

Thoſe very laws ſo added, they themſelves do not judge unlawful; as they plainly confeſs both in matter of preſcript attire, and of rites appertaining to burial. Hooker.

PRE´SCRIPT. n. ſ. [præſcriptum, Latin.]

1. Direction; precept; model preſcribed. Milton ſeems to accent the laſt.

By his preſcript, a ſanctuary is fram'd
Of cedar, overlaid with gold. Milton.

2. Medical order.

Nor did he ever with ſo much regret ſubmit unto any preſcript. Fell.

PRESCRI´PTION. n. ſ. [preſcription, French; præſcriptio, Latin; from præſcribo, Latin.]

1. Rules produced and authoriſed by long cuſtom; cuſtom continued till it has the force of law.

You tell a pedigree
Of threeſcore and two years, a ſilly time
To make preſcription for a kingdom's worth. Shakeſpeare.

Uſe ſuch as have prevailed before in things you have employed them; for that breeds confidence, and they will ſtrive to maintain their preſcription. Bacon's Eſſays.

It will be found a work of no ſmall difficulty, to diſpoſſeſs a vice from that heart, where long poſſeſſion begins to plead preſcription. South.

Our poet bade us hope this grace to find,
To whom by long preſcription you are kind. Dryden.

The Lucqueſe plead preſcription, for hunting in one of the duke's foreſts, that lies upon their frontiers. Addiſon.

2. Medical receipt.

My father left me ſome preſcriptions
Of rare and prov'd effects; ſuch as his reading
And manifeſt experience had collected
For general ſov'reignty. Shakeſpeare.

PRE´SEANCE. n. ſ. [preſeance, French.] Priority of place in ſitting. Not uſed.

The gheſts, though rude in their other faſhions, may, for their diſcreet judgment in precedence and preſeance, read a leſſon to our civileſt gentry. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

PRE´SENCE. n. ſ. [preſence, French; præſentia, Lat.]

1. State of being preſent; contrary to abſence.

To-night we hold a ſolemn ſupper,
And I'll requeſt your preſence. Shakeſpeare.

The preſence of a king engenders love
Amongſt his ſubjects and his loyal friends,
As it diſanimates his enemies. Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.

We have always the ſame natures, and are every where the ſervants of the ſame God, as every place is equally full of his preſence, and every thing is equally his gift. Law.

2. Approach face to face to a great perſonage.

The ſhepherd Dorus anſwered with ſuch a trembling voice and abaſhed countenance, and oftentimes ſo far from the matter, that it was ſome ſport to the young ladies, thinking it want of education, which made him ſo diſcountenanced with unwonted preſence. Sidney.

Men that very preſence fear,
Which once they knew authority did bear. Daniel.

3. State of being in the view of a ſuperior.

I know not by what power I am made bold,
In ſuch a preſence here, to plead my thoughts. Shakeſpeare.

Thou with eternal Wiſdom didſt converſe,
Wiſdom thy ſiſter, and with her didſt play
In preſence of th' Almighty Father, pleas'd
With thy celeſtial ſong. Milton.

Perhaps I have not ſo well conſulted the repute of my intellectuals, in bringing their imperfections into ſuch diſcerning preſences. Glanville's Scepſis.

Since clinging cares and trains of inbred fears,
Not aw'd by arms, but in the preſence bold,
Without reſpect to purple or to gold. Dryden.

4. A number aſſembled before a great perſon.

Look I ſo pale?—
—Ay; and no man in the preſence,
But his red colour hath forſook his cheeks. Shakeſpeare.

Odmar, of all this preſence does contain,
Give her your wreath whom you eſteem moſt fair. Dryden.

5. Port; air; mien; demeanour.

Virtue is beſt in a body that is comely, and that hath rather dignity of preſence, than beauty of aſpect. Bacon.

A graceful preſence beſpeaks acceptance, gives a force to language, and helps to convince by look and poſture. Collier.

How great his preſence, how erect his look,
How ev'ry grace, how all his virtuous mother
Shines in his face, and charms me from his eyes! Smith.

6. Room in which a prince ſhows himſelf to his court.

By them they paſs, all gazing on them round,
And to the preſence mount, whoſe glorious view
Their frail amazed ſenſes did confound. Spenſer.

An't pleaſe your grace, the two great cardinals
Wait in the preſence. Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

The lady Anne of Bretagne, paſſing through the preſence in the court of France, and eſpying Chartier, a famous poet, leaning upon his elbow faſt aſleep, openly kiſſing him, ſaid, we muſt honour with our kiſs the mouth from whence ſo many ſweet verſes have proceeded. Peacham.

7. Readineſs at need; quickneſs at expedients.

A good bodily ſtrength is a felicity of nature, but nothing comparable to a large underſtanding and ready preſence of mind. L'Eſtrange.

Errors, not to be recall'd, do find
Their beſt redreſs from preſence of the mind;
Courage our greateſt failings does ſupply. Waller.

8. The perſon of a ſuperior.

To her the ſov'reign preſence thus reply'd. Milton.

PRESENCE-CHAMBER. } n. ſ. [preſence and chamber or PRESENCE-ROOM. } room.] The room in which a great perſon receives company.

If theſe nerves, which are the conduits to convey them from without to their audience in the brain, the mind's preſence-room, are ſo diſordered, as not to perform their functions, they have no poſtern to be admitted by. Locke.

Kneller, with ſilence and ſurpriſe,
We ſee Britannia's monarch riſe,
And aw'd by thy deluſive hand,
As in the preſence-chamber ſtand. Addiſon.

Be not often preſent at feaſts, not at all in diſſolute company; pleaſing objects ſteal away the heart. Taylor.

Much have I heard
Incredible to me, in this diſpleas'd,
That I was never preſent on the place
Of thoſe encounters. Milton's Agoniſtes.

2. Not paſt; not future.

Thou future things canſt repreſent
As preſent. Milton.

A preſent good may reaſonably be parted with, upon a probable expectation of a future good which is more excellent. Wilkins.

The moments paſt, if thou art wiſe, retrieve
With pleaſant mem'ry of the bliſs they gave;
The preſent hours in preſent mirth employ,
And bribe the future with the hopes of joy. Prior.

The preſent age hath not been leſs inquiſitive than the former ages were. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

The preſent moment like a wife we ſhun,
And ne'er enjoy, becauſe it is our own. Young.

3. Ready at hand; quick in emergencies.

If a man write little, he had need have a great memory; if he confer little, he had need have a preſent wit; and if he read little, he had need have much cunning. Bacon.

This much I believe may be ſaid, that the much greater part of them are not brought up ſo well, or accuſtomed to ſo much religion, as in the preſent inſtance. Law.

The PRE´SENT. An elliptical expreſſion for the preſent time; the time now exiſting.

When he ſaw deſcend
The Son of God to judge them, terrify'd
He fled; not hoping to eſcape, but ſhun
The preſent; fearing, guilty, what his wrath
Might ſuddenly inflict. Milton.

Men that ſet their hearts only upon the preſent, without looking forward into the end of things, are ſtruck at. L'Eſtrange.

Who, ſince their own ſhort underſtandings reach
No further than the preſent, think ev'n the wiſe
Speak what they think, and tell tales of themſelves. Rowe.

At PRE´SENT. [à preſent, Fr.] At the preſent time; now; elliptically, for the preſent time.

The ſtate is at preſent very ſenſible of the decay in their trade. Addiſon.

PRE´SENT. n. ſ. [preſent, French; from the verb.]

I to the heav'nly viſion thus preſum'd. Milton.

4. To form confident or arrogant opinions: with upon before the cauſe of confidence.

The life of Ovid being already written in our language, I will not preſume ſo far upon myſelf, to think I can add any thing to Mr. Sandys his undertaking. Dryden.

This man preſumes upon his parts, that they will not fail him at time of need, and ſo thinks it ſuperfluous labour to make any proviſion beforehand. Locke.

5. To make confident or arrogant attempts.

In this we fail to perform the thing, which God ſeeth meet, convenient, and good; in that we preſume to ſee what is meet and convenient, better than God himſelf. Hooker.

God, to remove his ways from human ſenſe,
Plac'd heav'n from earth ſo far, that earthly ſight,
If it preſume, might err in things too high,
And no advantage gain. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

6. It has on or upon ſometimes before the thing ſuppoſed.

He, that would not deceive himſelf, ought to build his hypotheſis on matter of fact, and not preſume on matter of fact, becauſe of his hypotheſis. Locke.

Luther preſumes upon the gift of continency. Atterbury.

7. It has of ſometimes, but not properly.

Preſuming of his force, with ſparkling eyes,
Already he devours the promis'd prize. Dryden.

PRESU´MER. n. ſ. [from preſume.] One that preſuppoſes; an arrogant perſon.

Heavy with ſome high minds is an overweight of obligation; otherwiſe great deſervers do grow intolerable preſumers. Wotton.

PRESU´MPTION. n. ſ. [præſumptus, Lat. preſomption, French.]

1. Suppoſition previouſly formed.

Thou haſt ſhewed us how unſafe it is to offend thee, upon preſumptions afterwards to pleaſe thee. King Charles.

Though men in general believed a future ſtate, yet they had but confuſed preſumptions of the nature and condition of it. Rogers.

2. Confidence grounded on any thing preſuppoſed: with upon.

A preſumption upon this aid, was the principal motive for the undertaking. Clarendon.

Thoſe at home held their immoderate engroſſments of power by no other tenure, than their own preſumption upon the neceſſity of affairs. Swift's Miſcellanies.

3. An argument ſtrong, but not demonſtrative; a ſtrong probability.

The error and unſufficience of their arguments doth make it, on the contrary ſide againſt them, a ſtrong preſumption, that God hath not moved their hearts to think ſuch things, as he hath not enabled them to prove. Hooker.

4. Arrogance; confidence blind and adventurous; preſumptuouſneſs.

Let my preſumption not provoke thy wrath;
For I am ſorry, that with reverence
I did not entertain thee as thou art. Shakeſpeare.

2. Irreverent with reſpect to holy things.

The ſins whereinto he falleth, are not preſumptuous; but are ordinarily of weakneſs and infirmity. Perkins.

Thus I preſumptuous: and the viſion bright,
As with a ſmile more brighten'd, thus reply'd. Milton.

The pow'rs incens'd
Puniſh'd his preſumptuous pride,
That for his daring enterprize ſhe dy'd. Dryden.

Canſt thou love
Preſumptuous Crete, that boaſts the tomb of Jove? Pope.

PRESU´MPTUOUSLY. adv. [from preſumptuous.]

1. Arrogantly; confidently.

2. Irreverently.

Do you, who ſtudy nature's works, decide,
Whilſt I the dark myſterious cauſe admire;
Nor, into what the gods conceal, preſumptuouſly enquire.
Addiſon's Remarks on Italy.

3. With vain and groundleſs confidence in divine favour.

I entreat your prayers, that God will keep me from all premature perſuaſion of my being in Chriſt, and not ſuffer me to go on preſumptuouſly or deſperately in any courſe. Hammond.

PRESU´MPTUOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from preſumptuous.] Quality of being preſumptuous; confidence; irreverence.

PRESUPPO´SAL. n. ſ. [præ and ſuppoſal.] Suppoſal previouſly formed.

All things neceſſary to be known that we may be ſaved, but known with preſuppoſal of knowledge concerning certain principles, whereof it receiveth us already perſuaded. Hooker.

Priva'tion. n. ſ. [privation, French; privatio, Lat.]

1. Removal or deſtruction of any thing or quality.

For, what is this contagious ſin of kind,
But a privation of that grace within? Davies.

If the privation be good, it follows not the former condition was evil, but leſs good; for the flower or bloſſom is a poſitive good, although the remove of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good. Bacon.

So bounded are our natural deſires,
That wanting all, and ſetting pain aſide,
With bare privation ſenſe is ſatisfy'd. Dryden.

After ſome account of good, evil will be known by conſequence, as being only a privation or abſence of good. South.

A privation is the abſence of what does naturally belong to the thing, or which ought to be preſent with it; as when a man or horſe is deaf or dead, or a phyſician or divine unlearned; theſe are privations. Watts's Logick.

2. The act of the mind by which, in conſidering a ſubject, we ſeparate it from any thing appendant.

How hard is it to keep it unbetray'd? Daniel.

He would rather loſe half of his kingdom, than be privy to ſuch a ſecret, which he commanded me never to mention. Swift.

PRI'VY. n. ſ. Place of retirement; neceſſary houſe.

Your fancy
Would ſtill the ſame ideas give ye,
As when you ſpy'd her on the privy. Swift.

PRIZE. n. ſ. [prix, French.]

1. A reward gained by conteſt with competitors.

If ever he go alone, I'll never wreſtle for prize. Shakeſpeare.

Though their foe were big and ſtrong, and often brake the ring,

I fought and conquer'd, yet have loſt the prize. Dryden.

The raiſing ſuch ſilly competitions among the ignorant, propoſing prizes for ſuch uſeleſs accompliſhments, and inſpiring them with ſuch abſurd ideas of ſuperiority, has in it ſomething immoral as well as ridiculous. Addiſon.

They are not indeed ſuffered to diſpute with us the proud prizes of arts and ſciences, of learning and elegance, in which I have much ſuſpicion they would often prove our ſuperiors. Law.

2. A reward gained by any performance.

True poets empty fame and praiſe deſpiſe;
Fame is the trumpet, but your ſmile the prize. Dryden.

3. [Priſe, French.] Something taken by adventure; plunder.

The king of Scots ſhe did ſend to France,
To fill king Edward's fame with priſoner kings,
And make his chronicle as rich with prize,
As is the ouzy bottom of the ſea
With ſunken wreck. Shakeſpeare's Henry V.

Age that all men overcomes, has made his prize on thee. Chapman.

He acquitted himſelf like a valiant, but not like an honeſt man; for he converted the prizes to his own uſe. Arbuthnot.

Then proſtrate falls, and begs with ardent eyes
Soon to obtain and long poſſeſs the prize. Pope.

To PRIZE. v. a. [from appraiſer; priſer, French; appretiare, Latin.]

1. To rate; to value at a certain price.

PRO. [Latin.] For; in defence of; pro and con, for pro and contra, for and againſt. Deſpicable cant.

Doctrinal points in controverſy had been agitated in the pulpits, with more warmth than had uſed to be; and thence the animoſity increaſed in books pro and con. Clarendon.

Matthew met Richard, when
Of many knotty points they ſpoke,
And pro and con by turns they took. Prior.

PROBABI'LITY. n. ſ. [probabilitas, Latin; probabilité, French; from probable.] Likelihood; appearance of truth; evidence ariſing from the preponderation of argument: it is leſs than moral certainty.

Probability is the appearance of the agreement or diſagreement of two ideas, by the intervention of proofs, whoſe connection is not conſtant; but appears for the moſt part to be ſo. Locke.

As for probabilities, what thing was there ever ſet down ſo agreeable with ſound reaſon, but ſome probable ſhew againſt it might be made? Hooker's Preface.

The reaſon why men are moved to believe a probability of gain by adventuring their ſtocks into ſuch foreign countries as they have never ſeen, and of which they have made no trial, is from the teſtimony of other credible perſons. Wilkins.

If a truth be certain, and thwart intereſt, it will quickly fetch it down to but a probability; nay, if it does not carry with it an impregnable evidence, it will go near to debaſe it to a downright falſity. South.

Though moral certainty be ſometimes taken for a high degree of probability, which can only produce a doubtful aſſent; yet it is alſo frequently uſed for a firm aſſent to a thing upon ſuch grounds as fully ſatiſfy a prudent man. Tillotſon.

For a perpetual motion, magnetical virtues are not without ſome ſtrong probabilities of proving effectual. Wilkins.

Which tempers, if they were duly improved by proper ſtudies, and ſober methods of education, would in all probability carry them to greater heights of piety, than are to be found amongſt the generality of men. Law.

PRO'BABLE. adj. [probable, French; probabilis, Lat.] Likely; having more evidence than the contrary.

The publick approbation, given by the body of this whole church unto thoſe things which are eſtabliſhed, doth make it but probable that they are good, and therefore unto a neceſſary proof that they are not good it muſt give place. Hooker.

The only ſeaſonable inquiry is, which is of probables the moſt, or of improbables the leaſt ſuch. Hammond.

I do not ſay, that the principles of religion are meerly probable; I have before aſſerted them to be morally certain: and that to a man who is careful to preſerve his mind free from prejudice, and to conſider, they will appear unqueſtionable, and the deductions from them demonſtrable. Wilkins.

That is accounted probable, which has better arguments producible for it, than can be brought againſt it. South.

They aſſented to things, that were neither evident nor certain, but only probable; for they converſed, they merchandized upon a probable perſuaſion of the honeſty and truth of thoſe whom they correſponded with. South.

PRO'BABLY. adv. [from probable.] Likely; in likelihood.

Diſtinguiſh betwixt what may poſſibly, and what will probably be done. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

Our conſtitution in church or ſtate could not probably have been long preſerved, without ſuch methods. Swift.

The kinds of probation for ſeveral things being as much diſproportioned, as the objects of the ſeveral ſenſes are to one another. Wilkins.

2. The act of proving by ratiocination or teſtimony.

When theſe principles, what is, is, and it is impoſſible for the ſame thing to be, and not to be, are made uſe of in the probation of propoſitions, wherein are words ſtanding for complex ideas, as man or horſe, there they make men receive and retain falſehood for manifeſt truth. Locke.

3. [Probation, French.] Trial; examination.

In the practical part of knowledge, much will be left to experience and probation, whereunto indication cannot ſo fully reach. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

4. Moral trial.

At the end of the world, when the ſtate of our trial and probation ſhall be finiſhed, it will be a proper ſeaſon for the diſtribution of public juſtice. Nelſon.

5. Trial before entrance into monaſtick life; noviciate.

I ſuffer many things as an author militant, whereof, in your days of probation, you have been a ſharer. Pope to Swift.

PROBA'TIONARY. adj. [from probation.] Serving for trial.

PROBA'TIONER. n. ſ. [from probation.]

1. One who is upon trial.

Hear a mortal muſe thy praiſe rehearſe,
In no ignoble verſe;
But ſuch as thy own verſe did practiſe here,
When thy firſt fruits of poeſy were giv'n,
To make thyſelf a welcome inmate there;
While yet a young probationer,
And candidate of heav'n. Dryden.

Build a thouſand churches, where theſe probationers may read their wall lectures. Swift.

2. A novice.

This root of bitterneſs was but a probationer in the ſoil; and though it ſet forth ſome offsets to preſerve its kind, yet Satan was fain to cheriſh them. Decay of Piety.

PROBA'TIONERSHIP. n. ſ. [from probationer.] State of being a probationer; noviciate.

He has afforded us only the twilight of probability, ſuitable to that ſtate of mediocrity and probationerſhip, he has been pleaſed to place us in here, wherein to check our over-confidence. Locke.

PRO'BATORY. adj. [from probo, Latin.] Serving for trial.

Job's afflictions were no vindicatory puniſhments, but probatory chaſtiſements to make trial of his graces. Bramhall.

PROBA'TUM EST. A Latin expreſſion added to the end of a receipt, ſignifying it is tried or proved.

Vain the concern that you expreſs,
That uncall'd Alard will poſſeſs
Your houſe and coach both day and night,
And that Macbeth was haunted leſs
By Banquo's reſtleſs ſprite:
Lend him but fifty louis d' or,
And you ſhall never ſee him more;
Take my advice, probatum eſt.
Why do the gods indulge our ſtore,
But to ſecure our reſt? Prior.

PROBE. n. ſ. [from probo, Latin.] A ſlender wire by which ſurgeons ſearch the depth of wounds.

A round white ſtone was lodged, which was ſo faſtened in that part, that the phyſician with his probe could not ſtir it. Fell.

To wake and wage a danger profitleſs. Shakeſpeare.

PRO´FLIGATE. adj. [profligatus, Latin.] Abandoned; loſt to virtue and decency; ſhameleſs.

Time ſenſibly all things impairs;
Our fathers have been worſe than theirs,
And we than ours; next age will ſee
A race more profligate than we,
With all the pains we take, have ſkill enough to be. Roſc.

How far have we
Prophan'd thy heav'nly gift of poeſy?
Made proſtitute and profligate the muſe,
Debas'd to each obſcene and impious uſe,
Whoſe harmony was firſt ordain'd above
For tongues of angels, and for hymns of love. Dryden.

Though Phalaris his brazen bull were there,
And he wou'd dictate what he'd have you ſwear,
Be not ſo profligate, but rather chuſe
To guard your honour, and your life to loſe. Dryden.
